Willkie Acts To Restore Pennsylvania Party Peace

Calls Leaders Aboard Train Speeding Him On Midwest Tour

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Aboard Willkie Special, Sept. 29.—Wendell L. Willkie tonight moved adroitly to close Republican ranks in Pennsylvania, a G. O. P. trouble-spot since the Philadelphia convention.

Speeding westward for key speeches in Detroit and Cleveland, he already was preparing for his return East to Pittsburgh on Thursday.

Willkie hopes to build in Pennsylvania a Republican campaign as harmonious as the one he left behind him in New York today.

Moving with forthrightness, he invited aboard his train Joseph N. Pew, jr., Philadelphia Republican leader, and Jay Cooke, Pennsylvania Republican Senatorial nominee.

Pew Apparently Happy

Following five hours of conference they left the train at Syracuse, with Pew, whose relations with Willkie have been strained, apparently happy.

Pew was asked by a reporter whether Willkie had apologized "for anything he said about you before or after the convention." He replied, "I have no idea he made any remarks about me before or after the convention."

Previously, Willkie had invited Gov. Arthur H. James to tour the State with the candidate when the train enters Pennsylvania. He arranged for separate conferences with western Republican county chairmen in Pittsburgh, and with Philadelphia County precinct committeemen in the Quaker City, all in the interest of Keystone State peace.

Willkie took a week's leave of absence from New York tonight for a shakedown cruise through the industrial Midwest.

"I go, but I return," was his message to New York State Republican leaders, who have an unwritten pact to cease petty quarreling and drive together in an unhill battle for this pivotal State.

Short Speeches Scheduled

Detroit-bound, the Willkie campaign train pulled out of Grand Central Station, New York City, at 4 p. m. after a "day of rest" in which the seemingly tireless candidate snatched an extra hour of sleep from New York's reversion to standard time.

Before returning this week-end for a blitzkrieg schedule through the populous East, Willkie will make three major nationally broadcast speeches in Detroit (tomorrow night), Cleveland (Wednesday) and Pittsburgh (Thursday).

Speeding tonight at its usual breakneck pace through New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio, the Will-

Fair Weather Continues Today, Bureau Promises

Washington's population dropped sharply yesterday as balmy weather lured nature-minded Capitalites to nearby Maryland and Virginia by the thousands.

Most of those who remained in the city visited Rock Creek Park, Hains Point and the Zoo.

Temperatures hovered around 70 degrees most of the day, reaching a high of 73 and a low of 46. Fair weather will continue today, the Weather Bureau promised, with little change in temperature.

Willkie Gains Confidence In 16-Day Tour

Believes His Chances Good, Barring International Flareup

What did Wendell L. Willkie accomplish in his spectacular tour of the West? Edward T. Folliard, of The Washington Post staff, landed at LaGuardia Field with Willkie Saturday night after a 16-day trip with the candidate. In this article, he endeavors to analyse some of the results.

Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

When Wendell L. Willkie rode out of the skies and reached the Atlantic Seaboard night before last, he ended the first phase of the most extraordinary campaign ever waged for the Presidency.

The Republican nominee left Rushville, Ind., on his 14-car special on the night of September 12. In a 16-day period, traveling by train, ferry-boat and transport plane, he covered 8,000 miles, campaigned in 19 States and made something like 100 speeches.

What did the Western swing avail the fighting, tousle-headed Hoosier? Where does he stand now as he begins the most intensive phase of his nonstop campaign, which will see him delivering 20 major speeches in the East and Midwest between now and election day?

Sees Election Still Wide Open

Here is what Willkie himself thinks:

An amateur, perhaps, but a hard-headed realist, he knows that he is fighting against enormous odds. Yet he feels that he has a chance to be elected on November 5. He thinks that if there is no flare-up in the international picture, he has a good chance.

Willkie emphatically disagrees with the talk that a third term for President Roosevelt is "in the bag." He thinks that the election is far from settled—that it is, in fact, wide open at this stage.

He is convinced—and the polls

Death at the Regatta

A spectator was drowned in the muddy Potomac yesterday, and thousands were caught for hours on roads and bridges in one of the worst traffic jams in District history as the fourteenth President's Cup Regatta ended.

Carroll Barnes

Carroll Barnes, 37, of 1424 A street northeast, was drowned when a boat in which he was rowing to shore from the cruiser on which he had watched the races was capsized in Anacostia River. Police said William Newton, of 1616 Trinidad street northeast, told them he and Barnes had gone to Plum Point, Md., with two other men to bring the cruiser to Washington.

After watching the races, Newton said, they moved into Washington Channel and anchored off Eleventh street. They had gone ashore when Barnes decided to go back to the boat for several articles. On the return trip, police were told, Barnes, who weighed about 210 pounds, shifted his weight in the boat and turned it over.

Newton and several bystanders leaped in the river and swam out to the overturned dinghy but did not see Barnes. His body was recovered an hour and a half later. Barnes' wife and his daughter, Minnie, who were returning from Norfolk, Va., did not learn of the tragedy until last night.

Hershey Made Temporary Draft Chief

Senate-House Group Reaches Agreement On Profits Tax Bill

By William V. Neasly,
Post Staff Writer

The Nation's cry for utmost speed in all parts of the gigantic defense endeavor yesterday brought two important developments:

Announcement was made that President Roosevelt has signed an executive order authorizing Lieut. Col. Lewis B. Hershey to exercise powers designated for the director of the draft system pending appointment of a director.

And House and Senate conferees, in a rare Sunday session, reached final agreement on the excess profits tax bill, permitting completion of legislative action on the measure this week.

Appointment Temporary

Both Lieut. Col. Hershey and Maj. Gen. Allen W. Gullion, judge advocate general of the Army, have been among those most prominently mentioned for appointment as administrator of the selective service organization, and each has had active supporters for the position.

It was emphasized, however, that Col. Hershey was not designated acting director, though he was authorized to exercise powers and perform duties that will keep the draft machinery functioning in its preliminary work until an executive is named by the President.

Col. Hershey, already the executive officer of the joint Army-Navy selective service committee, was authorized to administer the draft law, to make such amendments to regulations as he sees fit, to appoint personnel to jobs paying

Moscow (Monday), Sept. 30. Russia was informed in advance of the new German-Italian-Japanese alliance, which "doubtless means further aggravation of the war and expansion of its realm," according to an editorial today in the official newspaper Pravda as released by Tass, official Soviet news agency.

Tass quoted Pravda's editorial as follows:

"A pact of military alliance between Germany, Italy and Japan was concluded in Berlin on September 27. There is no need to enlarge upon the contents of this pact as its text has been published in the press.

Not Unexpected

"The pact does not represent anything particularly unexpected for the Soviet Union because it constitutes in effect the embodiment of relations already formed between Germany, Italy and Japan on one hand and England and the United States on the other hand, and because the Soviet government had been informed by the German government about the impending conclusion of the tripartite pact before it was published.

"Proceeding to the question of the meaning of this pact," Pravda said, "one should note in the first place that it signifies the advent of a new phase of the war which is more extensive than prior to conclusion of the pact.

"If until latterly the war has been confined to the sphere of Europe and Northern Africa in the West and the sphere of China in the East while these two spheres were separated from each other, now an end is being put to this separation because henceforward Japan has renounced the policy of non-interference in European affairs while Germany and Italy, in their turn, renounce the policy of non-interference in Far Eastern affairs.

"This doubtless means further aggravation of the war and expansion

Nazis Pierce Defenses Of London After Day Of Thinned-Out Raids by Lone Fliers

BULLETIN

Berlin (Monday), Sept. 30 (AP).—German dive bombers attacked the Rolls Royce Motor Works in Derby, England, from a height of approximately 170 feet in raids yesterday, DNB reported today.

It said one of the warplanes piloted by First Lieut. Baron von Butlar started a power dive directly over assembly halls and dropped bombs of the heaviest caliber at a moment when he "could not miss."

The crew reported seeing the collapse of the halls with crashing walls, DNB reported.

By the Associated Press

London (Monday), Sept. 30.—Nazi bombs exploding in central London early today shook whole blocks of office buildings but Britain's fiercest antiaircraft barrage of the war effectively screened most of the capital from heavy damage.

One fire in central London caused by a huge Nazi oil bomb was extinguished by firemen after a 30-minute fight.

Nazi raiders piercing the anti-aircraft curtain attacked the city's heart apparently in single file and between long intermissions of silence.

Gas Main Is Struck

Concussion from the blasts ripped through London's deserted streets, carrying storms of shattered glass. Night workers who still were on duty dived under tables.

Two heavy bombs struck a gas main in a southwestern suburb, and reports from outlying districts indicated most of the bombers dropped their cargoes on the capital's fringe.

One aged man died of shock when bombs shattered a tenement district in southeast Scotland, and there were other uncounted casualties. Sleep-disturbing "nuisance" raids were reported from the Midlands.

The start of the twenty-third successive night of Nazi air raids followed a thinned-out daylight offensive of mere hit-and-run stabs by lone raiders—a change in tactics after Friday's massed assaults which some military observers said would have heralded a week-end invasion had the Nazis succeeded in beating down the Royal Air Force.

Fire Rocks Buildings

Depsite the heaviness of the barrage in the London area, however, the number of bombs dropped in the metropolitan zone appeared to be no greater than on previous nights, if as great.

Rooftop observers considered the fire, which literally rocked buildings in central London for several minutes, as the heaviest yet in more than three weeks of air siege.

Military sources said the Nazis' failure on Friday to crash through

British Warn Madagascar To Bolt Vichy

Governor Rejects Demands Despite Threat of Blockade

By the Associated Press

Vichy, France, Sept. 29.—The governor general of French Madagascar, off the east coast of Africa, informed the Petain government today he had been ordered by the British to align the colony with the De Gaulle movement or the British would cut the island off by blockade.

The report from the governor general, Leon Cayla, was disclosed by the colonial ministry.

(Madagascar lies in the Indian Ocean and is separated from the southeast coast of Africa by the Mozambique Channel. It has a coastline of over 3,000 miles and a population of roughly 4,000,000, including the people of Mayotte and Comoro Islands.

Demands by Italians

(Madagascar and its island dependencies were declared a French colony on August 6, 1896.)

Gov. Cayla assured the Vichy government, the communique stated, that he had rejected the British demands.

He added that no signs of threatened action had yet been observed.

This is the second attempt of the British to take over the island colony, officials said. The government announced late in July that British troops had attempted to land at Madagascar, but were refused permission.

Since that time, colonial ministry officials said, British warships have been continually patrolling the entrances to Madagascar ports and preventing the movement of traffic.

Bombers Blast Key Ports, Pound Railroads, Airports, Munitions Plants

By James B. Reston.

London, Sept. 29.—Royal Air Force night bombing squadrons tonight returned to their steady hammering of German-held Continental ports amid stern warnings that roughening Channel weather still has not removed the threat of attempted invasion.

Observers along the Kent coast tonight reported bomb flashes all along the French coast, especially around Boulogne, as British bombers flew through a heavy rainstorm to resume a counteroffensive which last night struck at Berlin, at Nazi-held ports from Wilhelmshaven to Le Havre, and at German railroads, munitions factories and airports.

[The Associated Press reported Berlin had a two-hour air-raid alarm again tonight—its sixth in eight nights—but that no planes, bomb explosions, or antiaircraft fire were heard.]

Watch "Invasion Corner"

While the Royal Air Force and the Nazi Luftwaffe continue to swap blows in a kind of warfare that can go on indefinitely, the navy and army are keeping a close watch on the coast, especially around ports in what has come to be known as "the invasion corner."

A cold north wind blew over the Straits of Dover today and weather conditions there were unsettled. Low clouds hung over the sea and mist hid the French coast but visibility in mid-channel was good. Navy circles warned that signs of an autumn break in good weather must not be considered as ending the dangers of invasion.

Flat-bottomed boats and barges—chief form of transport for an invading force—cannot be used successfully in choppy seas. However, it was pointed out that the next few weeks should bring a second summer period of temporary calm when conditions would be favorable should Fuehrer Hitler decide to risk an attack in the hope of winning a quick victory over Britain.

Invasion Still Feared

The fact that preparations in French channel ports are steadily continuing is regarded as an indication that an invasion attempt is still being considered by Nazi leaders. These preparations are going on too consistently, it is said, to be merely an attempt to divert a proportion of the British bombing effort from more important objectives.

Though occasional visits are made to fortified bases like Cuxhaven, Wilhelmshaven and Kiel in an effort to knock off any large warships that might be getting ready to assist in the invasion, the main attacks on shipping are being directed nightly against large merchant troop carriers and small troop and tank carrying barges which the Germans have concentrated all along the narrow channel

Literary Lights Criss-Cross Over Politics on Air Forum

Six of the Nation's leading literary lights tangled last night in a radio debate over the respective merits of Roosevelt and Willkie, and a good time was had by all.

Clarence Buddington Kelland, the magazine writer, accused the President of being a dictator who "didn't let the Democratic Party hold a convention" and called the Republican convention "a spontaneous act of God."

Morris L. Ernst, lawyer-author, described Willkie's philosophy as "a plea for the gobble, gobble school of economics; it is O. K. by him if an insurance company with $5,000,000,000 grows to $50,000,000,000."

John Erskine, author-poet, said Willkie, if elected, "would consider us his constitutents and not his wards."

"It depends on what you want," observed Rex Stout, the novelist. "If what you want is a first-class capital and labor fracas, with no holds barred, Willkie is your man."

"Far too many women," said Nina Wilcox Putnam, the novelist, "have seen their own self-respect and that of their men slowly deteriorating since they have been pulled down to the level of incompetents on a dole system which puts a premium on incompetency."

To Roosevelt, said Frank Kingdon, writer-educator, "we owe the fact that we are now awake to our need"—and united for national defense."

Kingdon and Erskine locked in a lively argument over President Roosevelt's transfer of 50 destroyers to England, an act which the debaters on both sides approved but the method of which the Willkie supporters condemned.

Kingdon contended the President was acting in his capacity of commander-in-chief of the Nation's armed forces, constitutionally according to the opinion of the at-

D. C. Snub Blamed in Suicide Of Courtney Ryley Cooper

Writer Is Found Hanged in New York; Friend of J. E. Hoover

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 29.—Courtney Ryley Cooper, 53, author and "circus fan No. 1," hanged himself in a closet of a hotel room yesterday. His body was found early today by hotel attendants.

Mrs. Cooper, the former Genevieve R. Furey, of Los Angeles, Calif., could advance no reason for his suicide but told police he had been morose over alleged snubs he had received in Washington when he sought to inform officials of German activities he said he discovered in Mexico.

Finally, she said, he had conferred with his close friend and writing collaborator, J. Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI, but she did not know the result of their conferences. Mrs. Cooper said her husband made an exhaustive investigation in Mexico several months ago and unearthed details of German conditions and propaganda there.

B. E. Sackett, special agent in charge of the FBI here, said, however, that neither Hoover nor any other member of the FBI had

Detective Follows Hunch

$8,000 in Loot Recovered, Architect Arrested as Burglar

By Alfred E. Lewis
Post Staff Writer

A detective's hunch, plus the persistence of himself and two colleagues, has led to the recovery of $8,000 in jewelry, silverware, and household furnishings, and the arrest of three members of a Washington-Baltimore housebreaking gang, it was learned here yesterday.

Two of the suspects are Washingtonians, and of these, one is an architect, who previously had served a term for looting homes he had helped design. The third suspect, together with $5,000 in stolen valuables found in his automobile, is being held in Baltimore. A fourth man is being sought.

Discovery and smashing of the housebreaking ring was directed by Detective Sergt. Eugene Lambert, who's a stickler about following up hunches, assisted by Detective Sergt. George Thornton and Precinct Detective George Saunders.

For the past several weeks members of the police clothing squad had observed in making the rounds of the pawnshops that an unusual amount of silverware had been turned in for cash, but none of it fitted with descriptions of items stolen from District homes.

Sergt. Lambert remembered that a 25-year-old Washington architect had been released from jail recently after serving a term for looting model homes. He had taken $6,000 worth of household furnishings to equip a home for his bride-to-be.

The detective then visited the pawnshops with a photograph of the architect, who was identified in the sale of about $3,000 worth of jewelry and silverware. Still, the jewelry was not connected with any Washington theft. Unable to explain how he got the valuables, according to police, the architect confessed that

Nazi Ports Blasted By R. A. F. in Storm

Bomb Flashes Seen All Along Coast; Berlin Has Alarm

from Antwerp to Le Havre.

Boulogne and Le Havre were the main targets this morning. These ports have big cranes and docks where merchantmen can be loaded with heavy equipment and it was on these targets that bombers directed their fire.

Le Havre Raided

For over two hours Le Havre was raided. The Air Ministry statement said docks were damaged, two direct hits are believed to have been scored on merchant vessels in the harbor and several fires were also started within the target area.

Calais and Boulogne, which have been raided almost every night for weeks, were again heavily bombarded and there are reports that the German forces have tried to minimize the effect of these nightly raids by rolling their barges onto the shore and spreading them out for safety.

After first visiting Antwerp and Fecamp, where wharves were attacked, the bombers came down the coast and pounded German cross-Channel gun positions in the vicinity of Cap Griz Nez. These guns have been firing across the channel periodically for weeks and it is generally believed here they will be used to cover any landing of Grman troops that might be attempted.

Repeated attacks were made on the well-fortified naval base at Wilhelmshaven. Pilots reported seeing bomb explosions within the dock area. One large fire broke out after a high-explosive bomb appeared to hit the target and successive bombers succeeded in battering the port by the light of this blaze.

Bremen Docks Bombed

The docks at Bremen were also bombed by high-level attacks.

While these attacks were taking place, many other raiders were covering railroad lines and military airports, some of which are used in German attacks on this country. Railroad yards and sidings at Munster, Hamm, Hamburg, Cologne and Mannheim were hit. The main line station at Hanover was reported damaged.

It is a favorite trick for the raiding forces of both countries to try to bomb each other's landing fields so that when they return from their raids they will wreck their planes on bomb craters. One direct hit was scored, the Air Ministry said, square in the path of an airport near Bassenheim. Landing grounds at Magdeburg and Mundter-Handord were damaged and three airports in the Netherlands were said to have been hit.

Though in general this was not the most successful attack of the war, it indicates the British are not prepared to let heavy weather interfere with their raids on Germany. They will certainly be handicapped when cold weather makes long, high flying difficult. But until it starts they will keep battering Germany's essential services nightly.

The raid on the German capital was evidently not so heavy this morning. Handicapped by poor visibility, several planes sliced across the city and concentrated their attacks on the west power plant and the main transformer and switching station at Friedrichsfelde. High-explosive and incendiary bombs were dropped and pilots who evidently ventured below the clouds reported seeing several hits in the target area.

No direct hits were claimed, however, and the raid was evidently broken off after a short while.

The largest bomber formations were concentrated not on Berlin but on a large munitions factory at Hanau, 15 miles east of Frankfort-on-Main. This important factory, which produces metal alloys for airplanes, torpedo and submarine parts and bronze bearings for variable pitch propellers, was bombed by strong forces of heavy bombers for over three hours. The attack was described as unusually successful.

Unlike those planes which drop through the defenses into Berlin, bombers raiding Hanau powerdived on their target. One of the first formations over the target managed to set the place on fire and then for three hours the raiders dove down through a red glow in the sky and, according to the official report, hit the plant time and again.

One large rectangular building was seen to collapse. Throughout the last part of the attack it was enveloped in flames and many other fires burning in the target area "towered thousands of feet into the air."

Pilots who took part in this attack said they dove through over a thousand feet of smoke to the edge of the flames before they let their bombs go. When they left for home they said the Hanau factory was a "blazing inferno."

One of the planes detailed to take part in this attack was unable to reach its target because of engine trouble. On the way home, however, he located an oil storage plant at Frankfurt-on-Main and dropped a load of incendiary bombs which caused a great explosion.

B'nai B'rith Head Lauds Democracy

Confidence that "the dynamics of democracy are far more powerful than any totalitarianism can ever be" was expressed yesterday by Henry Monsky, president of B'nai B'rith, in his annual Rosh Hashanah (Jewish New Year) message. The holidays begin on Wednesday at sundown.

Leader of the oldest and largest national Jewish service and fraternal organization, with 150,000 members, he declared that "democracy will and can manifest its strength and power to meet every and any challenge if all Americans—of all races, creeds and political convictions—accept the disciplined responsibility that citizenship in a democracy imposes, and count no sacrifice too dear if only freedom may prevail."

the defenses of the still untamed R. A. F., combined with the reported loss of 133 planes, not only forced the Germans to return to the use of single daylight raiders, but also may have smashed plans to cross the reasonably smooth Channel under a veil of mist and fog.

These observers said it was significant that Friday night's raids by the rough-riding R. A. F. on Adolf Hitler's "invasion ports" were among the heaviest yet.

These terrific blows, it was pointed out, also may have convinced Hitler that the use of an unusual number of German fighter planes in Friday's attacks had failed to obtain mastery over the British fighter force.

Although Sunday's attacks were widespread their effect was reported by the government to be minor.

Two attempts apparently were made to reach London where two short alerts were sounded, one in the morning and one in the evening. But there was no sign of activity noticeable in the London area during either alert.

Such raids as these were confined to the activities of lone planes over southeast and southwest towns.

Saturday night, was called by Londoners one of the quietest in the three weeks since the Luftwaffe began its regular dusk-to-dawn attacks.

The air ministry said Nazi night bombers attacked London, southwest England, the Merseyside about Liverpool and the east Midlands, but casualties were few, and damage, chiefly to homes and stores, less than usual.

Seven German bombers were reported officially to have been destroyed on raids over England since Saturday midnight—one shot down five by ground guns and another fouled a balloon cable.

The daylight jabs brought some havoc and death to several communities, but a joint air and home security ministries communique said "little damage was done by any of these attacks" and "there was a very small number of casualties."

One raider, sweeping out of clouds over a southeast coast town, killed one workman and injured another. A house and small plant were reported demolished.

though a close friend of many of us in the FBI, was in no way connected with the FBI."

Detective Caswell Jacobs, who pronounced his death a suicide, said he found an unsigned note in Cooper's room. It said: "In my clothes is $43 in cash. I think my bill is about $32. Give the hotel $32."

Cooper's body was hanging from a rope attached to a steam pipe.

Cooper's recognition as the Nation's leading circus fan came from many years' association with the "big top" and from his many writings on the subject. Born in Kansas City, Mo., October 31, 1886, he ran away at an early age to become a circus clown.

Later he became connected with the Kansas City Star, New York World, Chicago Tribune and Denver Post, meanwhile contributing articles to several magazines.

Love of the circus, however, led to his return to that life in 1914, when he became press agent for the old Sells-Floto Circus and for Col. W. F. (Buffalo Bill) Cody. He joined the United States Marines on August 1, 1918, and later was commissioned a second lieutenant.

Most of Cooper's books and magazine stories concerned two subjects—the circus or crime.

Recently he had been active in interpreting work of the F. B. I. in magazines and books and had collaborated with Hoover on many articles dealing with crime.

anchored on the Virginia side of the course, was estimated by Capt. Henry Helms, of Park Police, at 100,000. John A. Remon, chairman of the regatta association, said it was the largest crowd ever attracted by a President's Cup Regatta.

Three hours after the last race at 5:30, automobiles still were crawling at a snail's pace across the Potomac bridges. At one time more than an hour was required to cross Fourteenth Street Bridge.

So snarled was traffic at the Virginia end of Memorial Bridge, where road work is in progress, that many delayed motorists believed the bridge was closed. Traffic backed up by Key Bridge piled through Georgetown on the District side and 3 miles from the bridgehead in Virginia.

Altogether, Capt. Helms estimated, more than 5,000 automobiles crept around Hains Point or found parking places within sight of the race course.

Eight Metropolitan Police motorcycle patrolmen and 43 park policemen were detailed to handle the crush of traffic.

Both police forces reported, however, that no one was injured and no serious accidents occurred in the overloaded streets. It was, said a park policeman, "a real orderly crowd."

Latin-America Military Aides Arrive Today

Uruguayans Here, Others Due Tonight For Defense Tour

Hemisphere defense and aid to Britain and China in their wars against aggression, two cardinal points in the United States' immediate foreign policy, drew fresh attention in a series of developments yesterday.

With the Nation facing the implied warning in the Berlin-Rome-Tokyo alliance against any interference in either the European or Far East struggles, these activities gave prominence to the American course of recent months:

The first of twenty high military officers from 11 Latin-American countries arrived in Washington for a 16-day inspection tour of this Nation's defenses. The others are due today.

A report published by the Foreign Policy Association called China "the major ally, the first line of defense, of the western powers in Asia" and said their future positions in that area "may well turn on the ability of these powers to find means of extending effective assistance to China."

Record Aircraft Sales

Aircraft sales abroad were reported by the Commerce Department to have reached a new high last month, helping to boost exports to the United Kingdom to $125,309,000 for August, a new monthly high since November, 1924. Exports to Japan increased $10,000,000 over July, due chiefly to larger shipments of refined copper, iron and steel and oil.

Two officers of the Uruguayan army, Gen. Marcelino Bergalli and Lieut. Col. Oscar D. Gestido, were the first of the military missions to arrive for the inspection of this country's defense setup.

Representatives of Peru, Bolivia, Colombia and Panama were held up at Balboa, Canal Zone, by bad flying weather but are due here at 8:50 p. m. today.

Others en route were from Argentina, Paraguay, Guatemala, Honduras, Costa Rica and the Dominican Republica.

Tours Arranged

A meeting with President Roosevelt tomorrow, general conferences on hemisphere defense, and visits to Chesapeake Bay defenses, Fort Benning, Ga., infantry post; Randolph Field, Tex., Air Corps training center; Fort Sill, Okla., artillery center; Fort Knox, Ky., Armored Corps headquarters; industrial areas of Detroit and New York, and West Point, have been arranged.

The visitors will meet President Roosevelt tomorrow at noon, then will visit Mount Vernon, see a review of troops at Fort Myer and, in the evening, be guests at a reception and dinner by Gen. George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff.

Military representatives of other American countries are to come here for a second tour starting October 16.

The foreign policy report, written by T. A. Bisson, of the association staff, declared that her prolonged struggle with China has "deprived Japan of the economic margin necessary to cover a large-scale conflict with a third power."

Military and economic resources of Japan, it added, are "heavily mortgaged for the campaign in China, in which roughly one million troops, a considerable proportion of its shipping, and much of its air force are engaged."

Tokyo's swift offensive in Indo-China, as a preliminary step toward domination over all of southeast Asia, was achieved "more through default of Western powers than by a demonstration of real strength," Bisson wrote.

China Faces "New Difficulties"

He points out that China now faces "new difficulties of supply created by the closing of trade routes through Burma and Indo-China" and that eventually continued inability to obtain minimum supplies of heavy munitions will tend to weaken China's powers of resistance "and might even encourage the possibility of a dictated peace settlement."

"Should Japan win this primary objective," he adds, "it would be able to throw its full resources into an offensive against Southeast Asia."

The Commerce Department said the rise in exports to Britain in August reflected mainly an expansion in purchases of commodities essential to a war economy. Aircraft exports increased to $30,000,000.

Exports to Canada rose to $70,707,000, the highest monthly figure since October, 1929, and covered "increases in a fairly wide range of products."

Exports to nearly all other countries declined, although those to South America and Africa held close to the July levels.

Total imports declined from $232,000,000 to $220,000,000 between July and August.

11,000 Mothers and Children Quit London for Countryside

Thousands More From Razed Homes In East End Expected to Be Moved To Comparative Safety in a Few Weeks

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 29.—Eleven thousand mothers and children were moved from London to the comparative safety of the countryside over the week-end.

The record exodus in two days raised the number moved since the start of the aerial bombings on the capital to between 75,000 and 100,000.

Most of the women and children were from the poorer districts of the East End, where blocks of houses have been wrecked, leaving thousands homeless.

Through intermittent air raids they were taken out of the bombed areas to London railway stations.

Arrangements are being made for many thousands more who are expected to leave daily in the next few weeks.

Sydney, Australia, Sept. 29 (AP).—The Dakar incident and the new Italian-German-Japanese pact have resulted in a growing demand here for formation of an empire war cabinet, in which the British dominions would be represented directly.

Although the government of Premier Robert G. Menzies, has remained silent on the question, A. G. Cameron, leader of the Country Party, publicly suggested formation of an empire war cabinet, asserting: "we were driven to that in the last war and it looks as if we'll be driven to it in this war."

Berlin, Sept. 29 (AP).—Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, Nazi minister of propaganda, told the 8,000,000 members of the Hitler youth organization today to take Fuehrer Hitler as "a shining example of masculine life."

Alexandria, Egypt, Sept. 29 (AP).—Thirty-one Rumanian, Yugoslav, Bulgarian and Greek carbaret entertainers were ordered expelled from Alexandria today by the military governor. The order was believed inspired by efforts to prevent espionage.

London, Sept. 29 (AP).—Parents of Lieut. P. N. Buckley, commander of the British submarine Shark reported lost by the Admiralty July 15, said today they had received two letters from him in which he said he was receiving treatment for wounds in a Norwegian hospital. The letter aroused hopes that the other 43 of the Shark's crew were alive.

New York, Sept. 29. (AP).—British warplanes have bombed ports in Germany and the German-held portion of the continent 216 times in the last three months, said a British broadcasting summary heard here tonight by C. B. S.

..The B. B. C. breakdown of raids said that German ports were attacked 77 times, the French, 76; Belgian, 37, and Dutch, 26.

Boulogne, a German-held French port, was attacked 24 times; Ostend, Belgium, 22 times, and Calais, France, 20 times.

Army Tank Escort Greets Officer, Bride at Church

Fort Benning, Ga., Sept. 29 (AP).—The men of Company D of the Sixty-seventh Armored Regiment are tough old tankers, but there's a broad streak of sentiment in them.

That's why Lieut. J. A. McChristian and his bride, the former Miss Dempsey Catherine van Fleet, were surprised by a terrific noise as they stepped from the candle-lit peace of the post chapel.

There stood five tanks—motors roaring—manned by smiling crews.

Into the turret of the leading tank climbed the couple and away went the parade to the home of the bride's parents for the more conventional reception.

Putting Men and Dollars to Work

BY HOLGAR J. JOHNSON

President Institute of Life Insurance

JOHNSON

Life insurance policyholders, like everyone else, have a definite interest in increased employment. They also have a special reason for wanting to see capital employed.

For they—the 64 million of them—are among the most important capitalists in the country. In America it is the average man who owns the capital wealth of the nation—the 64 million life insurance policyholders, the depositors who own 45 million savings accounts, and the vast numbers who have small investments or any kind of property that brings in money. The so-called "little fellows," taken together, own so much more capital than the "big fellows" that there isn't any comparison.

When business activity rises, industry not only needs more capital, but it can afford to pay more for the use of capital—such as bank deposits and life insurance reserves. This raises the average interest rate on investments.

Just how important this rate is to our policyholders is indicated by the fact that most of the insurance companies averaged about 5% on their investments in the early "thirties," whereas nowadays they can only earn about 3½%. The difference means an added cost to policyholders for their life insurance protection amounting to about 400 million dollars a year.

WHY I bring this up is to suggest that we recognize the need for fostering conditions that increase business activity in every possible way and support such measures as will increase the flow of capital, owned by millions of Americans, into industry. For nothing will do more to increase employment, lower the cost of protection and put a premium on thrift—and thus improve the general welfare of the country.

Willkie Confident After 16-Day Tour

Sees His Chances Good, Barring International Flare

tend to bear him out on this—that the people who will really settle this battle of 1940 have not yet made up their minds.

In this connection, those who traveled with Willkie could not help but note a startling change as the G. O. P. candidate reached the East.

Here they heard the opinion expressed that Willkie was wasting his time. Why, it was being asked, didn't he recognize the futility of his task and save his breath? If he wanted to be President, why didn't he forget 1940 and start planning for 1944?

In the Middle West and out on the Pacific Coast, an entirely different attitude was apparent—even among those who undoubtedly will vote against Willkie.

Fighting Qualities Admired

Out there they liked the idea of a candidate for the Presidency making the traditional campaign tour. Newspapers that were opposed to Willkie almost invariably called on their readers to give him a courteous reception, reminding them that the times were grave and that this was all the more reason why they should listen to the arguments he had to offer.

There was one exception to this. In Madison, Wis., a pro-Roosevelt newspaper published on its first page an article by a Washington columnist telling Willkie to abondon the unequal battle and "come home." It suggested that he might better employ his talents by serving President Roosevelt in the national defense setup.

But on the whole, the people out through the Midwest and the Far West were eager to see and to hear Willkie. The fact that the Nation was facing a crisis, that the polls and the betting odds were all against the Hoosier, made no difference. Out there they like a fight—particularly when the prize is as great as the Presidency of the United States.

Greeted By Record Crowds

In the course of his Western tour, Willkie talked to crowds that were in many cases of record-breaking proportions for the localities. This was notably so in Tulsa, Albuquerque, San Diego, Los Angeles and Seattle.

But Willkie also talked on street corners, at factory gates and at whistle stops.

He talked in San Francisco's Chinatown, where the stake was 2,000 votes, at most. To the crusading Hoosier, a gathering of two or more persons was a crowd, and a crowd called for a speech. There were times when this most unorthodox of Presidential nominees looked for all the world like a candidate running for sheriff or alderman.

On two or three occasions he had the engineer back up his train so that he could carry his "Battle of America" to crowds—or, rather, groups—that had never before seen a Presidential candidate.

Cheers and Boos, Too

Ranging over America's plains and prairies, its deserts and mountains, the husky G. O. P. nominee was cheered a lot and booed a lot. From admirers came enough presents—baskets of fruit, boxes of candy, a copper elephant, flowers for Mrs. Willkie—to fill a box car. From persons here and there who resented his exercise of the inalienable right to aspire to the Presidency came unfriendly tomatoes.

Willkie laughed at the tomato barrage. The hecklers didn't bother him, either; in fact, he seemed to welcome them, particularly if they yelled something that would give him a chance to answer.

However, he did seem to be bothered by the "Boo, Willkie!" cries that came from children and youths in many cities and towns. Neither he nor anybody else on his train could figure this phenomenon out. They didn't know whether the youngsters were just being "impish"—as Willkie noted in Oakland, Calif.—or whether they were reflecting the attitude of their parents at home.

Willkie naturally was gratified by the huge crowds that turned out for him in many places. He was gratified, even though he well knew that crowds also turned out for William Jennings Bryan, Al Smith and other candidates who went down to defeat.

Attitudes Please Him

What impressed him even more than the size of the crowds, however, was the attitude of the crowds—their attentiveness, their seeming willingness to hear him out, whether they were for him, against him or on the fence.

A campaign train, speeding from town to town, city to city, is not a particularly good vantage point for reaching conclusions on political matters. However, for what they are worth, here are some observations on Willkie's tour of the West.

He doesn't appear to make much of a dent in President Roosevelt's huge labor following. In Portland, the Willkie caravan had to stop, and some reporters overheard an argument on a street corner. One workingman apparently had had the temerity to say he was for Willkie. Three or four others were trying to convince him of his error.

"What has Willkie ever done for you?" one of them shouted.

"Well," said the pro-Willkie man, "he hasn't had a chance to do anything."

"No, and he never will," was the reply.

By that time the caravan was moving on.

Willkie, judging from remarks of American Legionnaires along the way, will get a whopping vote from World War veterans. These men are now, for the most part, about Willkie's age—48—and in many States are extremely influential. Those interviewed at various stops said there were three main reasons for their enthusiasm for Willkie:

1. They are naturally proud that a fellow World War veteran is running for the Presidency, proud in the same way Spanish War veterans were proud of Teddy Roosevelt, the hero of San Juan Hill.

2. They are still resentful over President Roosevelt's action in cutting veterans' compensation in 1933 and then pouring out billions on people whom they deemed less worthy.

3. They have not liked President Roosevelt's attacks on Chairman Martin Dies in his campaign against subversive elements. Neither have they liked Mrs. Roosevelt's association with the American Youth Congress and Secretary Perkins' attitude in the case of Harry Bridges.

The crowds that turned out for Willkie at various towns, and which heard him speak from the rear platform of his train, were made up of all kinds of voters—pro-Roosevelt, pro-Willkie and the "I don't know" type. He may have picked up a good many votes at these stops, but that can't be proved.

Those who gathered for his more formal speeches—the huge gatherings in Tulsa, Los Angeles, Seattle and Omaha, for example—were predisposed to Willkie. They cheered him lustily even before he had opened his mouth.

Willkie may not have gained any votes in theses peeches, but he probably did accomplish one thing of importance. He gave his supporters inspiration, knocked the defeatist attitude out of them, and encouraged them to ring a few more door bells between now and November 5.

The voters in many places—but particularly in California—did not seem to be bothered by the big national debt, no matter how much Willkie warned them that "the road to bankruptcy leads to the death of democracy."

In Bakersfield, Calif., an automobile dealer was asked about this seeming indifference.

"Well," he said, "I guess you would explain it this way: People don't feel the same way they used to about debts. A lot of these people you see around here are deeply in debt themselves and always will be. The attitude of many of them is, 'If you don't like it, sue me.'"

Rural Areas Dislike 3d Term

The third-term issue seemed more effective in the rural areas than in the cities. In the cities, it appeared, many people were thinking about the matter, not in terms of American tradition, but in personal terms. They were applying the idea of rotation in office to their own jobs, and not liking the idea a bit.

Willkie must have sensed this. He quickly began to talk about the doctrine of the indispensable man. His thought apparently was to make Americans feel ashamed to think that, in a republic of 130,000,000 people, there was admittedly only one man who could lead them.

"I am not the indispensable man," he would say, and this invariably brought a cheer. "I may be cocky, but I am not that cocky."

Wherever the campaign train journeyed there were reports of large numbers of voters turning against President Roosevelt because of the third-term issue. This was especially so in the case of voters who had once been Republicans, but who turned to Mr. Roosevelt in 1932 and stuck by him in 1936.

A Colorful Stump Speaker

Willkie is undoubtedly the most colorful stump orator the G. O. P. has had since Teddy Roosevelt's time. He has a sweep to his oratory that is entirely lost when he goes on the radio. Facing the microphone, something seems to happen to him. He is simply not able to project himself as he does at other times, a fact that his supporters discovered with something of a shock at Elwood, Ind.

A workingman was watching Willkie in action at Takoma, Wash. He was impressed by the fact that Willkie had no manuscript in front of him.

"I am against him," the worker said; "but I like to see a man talk this way—all of it coming right out of his head."

But it has been when all of it was coming right out of Willkie' head that he has made his mistakes—his "To hell with Chicago" remark, his tirade about President Roosevelt selling Czecho-Slovakia "down the river," and some others.

There are some people around Willkie who would like to see him prepare all his speeches in advance. They admit that he might not be as colorful and as forceful, but they are convinced that it would be safer.

For example, they point out that, in a prepared speech, Willkie could have made out a good case in striking back at Henry Wallace's charge that the G. O. P. was the party of "appeasement." He could have shown, they say, that at the time of the Munich settlement, New Deal spokesmen were extremely eager to give President Roosevelt credit for it. All of this was in Willkie's files on the campaign train.

In San Francisco, there were reports that Willkie had lost many supporters—or, at least, potential supporters—because of his remark that Mr. Roosevelt sold Czecho-Slovakia down the river.

Would a more cautious candidate, a less spectacular candidate, be more effective than Willkie in this campaignof 1940? There is good reason to doubt it.

President Roosevelt has a powerful hold on the country. This hold is based on two things. First, the New Deal has given many millions of Americans reason to be grateful. People on relief are only a part of these millions. The great bulk are made up of people who have received AAA checks, who have been helped to save a home through HOLC or to buy one through FHA, who have had a son in the CCC camps, or who have a son or daughter being helped through college by the NYA, or who have benefited in some other way.

That is one thing. The other is the widespread conviction that in these serious times President Roosevelt is a good man to have at the helm, regardless of the arguments against a third term.

His theory, as a veteran Kansas newspaperman on the train observed, is that you can rub a pimple until it becomes an ugly boil.

The big Hoosier started out by shocking the country. He himself must have got a shock when he read the Gallup Poll in Los Angeles and discovered that President Roosevelt had taken the lead away from him in 38 States. The effect of this, however, was to lead him to intensify his efforts.

Writers Debate Merits of Roosevelt and Willkie

BATTLE OF BRAINS—Six authors assembled at the Willard last night to give their views in an American Forum of the Air broadcast. 9 Western States Lean to Willkie Wendell L. Willkie, on his Western tour, campaigned in 19 States, if Indiana be included. Out of a total of 531 electoral votes, these 19 States would have 199.

Willkie, according to consensus of experienced newspapermen on the campaign train, has a good chance to carry 9 of these with 77 electorial votes.

They are Indiana, 14; Kansas, 9; Oregon, 5; North Dakota, 4; South Dakota, 4; Minnesota, 11; Nebraska, 7; Iowa, 11, and Wisconsin, 12.

Three States—Illinois, 29; Washington, 8 and Idaho, 4—were listed as fighting States. Actually, however, States in both the Willkie and Roosevelt lists could be described in the same way.

That would leave President Roosevelt leading in seven of the States, with 81 electoral votes, as follows: Missouri, 15; Texas, 23; Oklahoma, 11; New Mexico, 3; Arizona, 3; California, 22, and Montana, 3.

To win the election, a candidate must get 266 electoral votes.

Last Rites Today For Col. Lohmann At Arlington

torney general.

"It doesn't help a bit," retorted Erskine, "to have his appointed attorney tell him he's right."

"He shouldn't have based his decision on the opinion of his own, private, tame attorney general," agreed Kelland.

In an argument over the third term, Erskine said that was his only objection to reelection of Roosevelt, to which Stout replied:

"I don't see how you can argue about the third term. It's like your wife's new hat. Either you like it or you don't."

Stout rebutted Erskine's statement about constituents and wards with the declaration that "my fear of Mr. Willkie is that he won't regard us either as wards or constituents but as customers."

Kelland said the New Deal had a "department of hysteria" which obscured the third term issue with red herrings.

This Kingdon denied. "I think your talk is a little fishy, sir," he remarked.

The debate, heard on Theodore Granik's "American Forum of the Air," was broadcast over a Nationwide Mutual Broadcasting System network from the Willard Hotel.

he had stolen them and implicated an accomplice.

The architect's tip sent Sergt. Lambert to Baltimore, where he checked in with the chief of detectives there. Sure enough, Baltimore police knew of the accomplice. In fact, for two weeks a special detail of detectives was conducting an intensive search for him as key man in a series of housebreakings.

Lambert, though, had managed to obtain the license number of the suspect's car, and within a day, with the aid of two Baltimore plainclothesmen, trapped the second man. In the suspect's automobile was found $5,000 worth of jewelry and furnishings. This loot, an examination disclosed, had mostly been stolen from Washington homes. The Washingtonian and Baltimorean had swapped loot.

The Baltimore man, wanted in Harrisburg, Pa., and Montgomery County, Md., for similar charges, allegedly admitted seven cases of housebreaking.

A third member of the gang was arrested here yesterday.

Mrs. H. K. Dodge To Be Buried Tomorrow

Final rites will be held tomorrow for Mrs. Helen Kerfoot Dodge, of Riverdale, Md., who died Saturday at her home, 814 Cleveland avenue.

The deceased had lived in Riverdale for 44 years, and had been active in the Riverdale Presbyterian Church. Surviving are her husband, Joseph A. Dodge; a son, Joseph A., jr.; a daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Dodge Klein; a sister, Mrs. Brice Bowie, all of Riverdale; and another sister, Mrs. John Affleck, of Winchester, Va.

Services, arranged by Chambers Riverdale funeral home, will be conducted by the Rev. W. Keith Custis, at Riverdale Presbyterian Church at 2 p. m., with burial in Glenwood Cemetery.

U. S. Seeks Lower Gas, Oil Prices in Suit

Antitrust Action To Be Filed Today Against Big Firms

Lower prices for gasoline and fuel oil were described by the Justice Department yesterday as primary aims of the antitrust suit it will file in District Court here today against the oil industry.

In a statement, the department said the suit would name as defendants the American Petroleum Institute and 22 major oil companies and their subsidiaries. Attorney General Jackson announced Saturday that he had instructed the antitrust division to proceed with the action.

A summary of the proposed complaint was issued by the department and listed charges ranging from conspiracy to maintain "noncompetitive prices" for crude oil to agreement on "uniform and exhorbitant price differentials between various grades of gasoline."

Successful prosecution of the suit, the department's statement said, should provide not only lower prices to consumers of oil products but higher prices for independent oil producers.

"Lower prices for petroleum products," the statement added, "are of great importance to the Government in its defense program. Finally, the production of oil should then be determined not on the basis of price maintenance but on true conservation principles."

The Petroleum Institute is an oil trade association. The department said the suit would seek its dissolution on the grounds that it is an agency through which alleged illegal practices are carried out.

The companies to be named defendants were not listed in the department's statement. It said, however, that the principal suit here would be supplemented by the following three suits:

Against the Phillips Petroleum Co. and the Phillips Pipe Line Co. in the Delaware Federal Court.

Against the Great Lakes Pipe Line Co. in the same court.

Willkie Begins Tour of Midwest

kie train will pause briefly tomorrow for short campaign speeches at South Bend, Ind., and Niles, Kalamazoo, Battle Creek, Jackson, Ann Arbor and Wyandotte, Mich.

At intimate conferences today with national and State party leaders at Commodore Hotel headquarters, Willkie stressed the need of "missionary" zeal and individual work in pushing his political "crusade."

Some close to the Presidential candidate voiced the hope that the days of Republican campaign "brain trusting" are over. Individual leaders are reportedly agreed to "get out and work" on their own for votes.

Here in New York, the Republican State organization, just starting its campaign for election of a ticket headed by Representative Bruce Barton for Senator, is concentrating fire almost solely on "No third term" as an issue.

That theme, already prominently raised in the West by Willkie, is expected to become a dominant phase of his oratory when he returns for a lightning tour of the East and New England.

In Manhattan, where two National independent organizations for Willkie—Lewis Douglas' Democrats-for-Willkie and Oren Root's Independent Willkie Clubs—have National headquarters—a terrific struggle is in progress to swing this State.

Here also, Republican Eastern Campaign headquarters and the Republican State Committee are concentrating efforts to slash in half or more President Roosevelt's 1936 million-and-a-half majority.

Their hope now is to pile up a 700,000 to 800,000 lead for Willkie outside the city, and to cut Roosevelt's margin in the city to less than 700,000—a feat that, if Willkie "keeps growing," will win him the State.

After Saturday's exhausting dash by train, airplane and motor to close the New York State convention at Yonkers, Willkie slept late at his Fifth avenue apartment, then came down to his Commodore Hotel headquarters for luncheon.

Before he boarded his train at four, he had long and intimate talks with Joseph W. Martin, jr., chairman of the Republican National Committee; Samuel Prior, his Eastern campaign chairman; Representative Wigglesworth, of Massachusetts, chairman of the Eastern Speakers' Bureau, and others.

By phone, he also talked with Barton, whose nomination to oppose Senator James M. Mead for the Senate was urged by Willkie and won the unanimous backing of the party here.

Willkie's major speech at the Olympia auditorium in Detroit Monday night will be directed chiefly to women voters, and his audience will include delegates attending the convention of the National Federation of Women's Republican Clubs.

$5,000 per year or less, to name assistants and delegate functions.

The President's move makes it possible for the committee to go ahead with the task of setting up machinery for registering 16,500,000 men from 21 to 35 years of age on October 16.

Nucleus of the draft organization already has been set up with headquarters in Potomac Park apartments, Twenty-first and C streets. Hershey was assigned to the committee by the Army in 1936. Many of his assistants also have been on the draft job for several years.

The committee now has about 125 employes, or approximately 50 under top strength.

The excess profits measure agreed on yesterday, estimated by conference committee members to provide nearly $1,000,000,000 additional revenue yearly to help finance the defense undertaking, would impose a levy of from 25 to 50 per cent on corporation profits above the normal return, and would also increase the normal corporation income tax from 20.9 per cent to 24 per cent, both levies to apply to this year's income.

The conferees' report is expected to be brought up in the House tomorrow and in the Senate Wednesday, with the measure reaching President Roosevelt's desk before the end of the week.

Stricken from the bill at the Sunday session was the amendment by Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, which the Senate adopted and which would have established high levies to apply if the country should go to war.

Included in the bill is provision on which the National Defense Commission has urged quick action, permitting defense contractors to deduct from their taxable income over a period of five years the full cost of plant expansions required for their defense work. It would apply to the cost of such facilities completed after June 10 of this year.

2 Systems Provided

Under the excess profits tax provisions, the first $5,000 of corporation income would be exempt.

Two systems would be provided for determining the amount of corporation profits which were "excess" and, therefore, subject to the excess profits levy. The first, or "average earnings," method would permit a corporation to count as its untaxed credit 95 per cent of its average earnings over a base period, 1936 to 1939, inclusive.

The second, or "invested capital" formula, would grant a credit of 8 per cent of a corporation's current invested capital.

The tax rates on excess profits would be 25 per cent on the first $20,000; 30 per cent on next $30,000; 36 per cent on next $50,000; 40 per cent on next $150,000; 45 per cent on next $250,000, and 50 per cent on over $500,000.

Insurance for Draftees

The measure also would set up a government insurance system for members of the Army and Navy, including draftees and National guardsmen, permitting them to buy policies with a face value of up to $10,000 at a rate of about 66 cents a month per thousand.

Congress Urged to Stay

Detroit, Sept. 29 (AP).—Congress was urged by the National Federation of Women's Republican Clubs today to remain in session so that the people might have a voice in "deliberations and decisions" during a time of "international crisis." Telegrams were sent to leaders in Congress by the federation's advisory committee, here for the visit tomorrow of Wendell L. Willkie.

Balboa Base Discussed

Balboa, C. Z., Sept. 29 (AP).—Naval officials disclosed today they expect additional warships, especially submarines, to be assigned soon to Balboa and they indicated means might be afoot to develop a fleet operations base here similar to that at Norfolk, Va.

The Political Arena

New York, Sept. 29 (AP).—John W. Hanes, former Roosevelt Administration member and now of the Democrats-for-Willkie Committee, asserted today that Henry A. Wallace's "attempt to tie Willkie to Hitler" had reacted against the President.

HANES

Hanes, former Undersecretary of the Treasury, said in a statement:

"The reaction to Wallace's attack is rather curious. Democrats have respected Mr. Roosevelt's running mate as a temperate, sincere man. They feel that he did not write his Des Moines speech himself but was forced to take orders from the little group of ambitious men around the President, when he intimated that a vote for Willkie, a World War veteran, was a vote for Hitler. People are beginning to realize how much the Roosevelt strategists fear to bring the third-term issue out into the open when they try to conceal it by tactics like these."

Dr. Charles F. Wishart, president of the College of Wooster, Ohio, "as an independent who voted for Roosevelt in 1936," has gone on record "as supporting Wendell Willkie this year with voice and vote and without stint or limit."

In a letter made public by the Republican National Committee, Dr. Wishart said he was "disturbed by the apparent apathy toward the proposed break with our long-time tradition against a third term."

"Positively," he added, "I am for Wendell Willkie because he is a constructive liberal, because he has shown a complete mastery of all the problems related to business organization on a large scale, because he will conserve the social and economic gains of the last decade while eliminating abuses, coordinating activities and bringing order out of confusion.

"I think I know a real man when I see him and, therefor I vote for Wendell Willkie."

FBI Emphasizes Antispy Courses

The F. B. I.'s annual retraining period for graduates of the National Police Academy will open today with emphasis on cases involving spying, sabotage and other forms of "Fifth Column" activities.

All 478 graduates of the academy have been invited to attend the one-week course, but officials believe that many will not be able to attend. The police officials are from local enforcement agencies all over the country.

Japanese Return U. S. Warehouse

Action Follows Few Hours After Seizure of Building

By the Associated Press

Haiphong, French-Indo China, Sept. 29.—Japanese soldiers today occupied the United States Far Eastern Trading Co.'s warehouse here but a few hours later abandoned it, replacing the American flag they had removed and tendering regrets to United States Consul Charles Reed.

The consul had placed the incident before French colonial authorities. Haiphong is being garrisoned by Japanese as part of the Vichy-Tokyo agreement granting "limited" military facilities—these to be used for an attack on China.

Maj. Gen. Issaku Nishihara, head of a Japanese delegation which negotiated details of the military facilities, and another ranking general headed a new mission, 50 strong, which arrived at Hanoi today.

The chiefs of mission arranged to meet Indo-China's governor general, Adm. Jean Decoux, tomorrow for conversations to clarify and implement the agreement and deal with the impromptu invasion last Sunday of the northern border regions by units of the Japanese South China army.

Shanghai, Sept. 30 (Monday) (U.P.)—Japanese troops closed all exits from the Japanese-controlled area north of Soochow Creek, cordoned off a huge area and were conducting a house-to-house search early today for persons who assassinated a Japanese army officer just before midnight.

The search was creating panic among Chinese fearing possible reprisals.

Japanese authorities, said the shooting was an act of terrorism.

The shooting occurred on the main thoroughfare of Hongkew—the first attempted assassination of a Japanese since Hongkew was reopened to Chinese.

American Sailor Beaten

Shanghai, (Monday) Sept. 30 (U.P.)—It was learned belatedly today that Japanese gendarmes on Saturday night seized an intoxicated American sailor, dragged him to a gendarmerie office and beat him before he was released. Navy authorities presently are withholding the man's name and other details.

The gendarmerie office in which the sailor allegedly was beaten is in the Bank and Communications Building.

Rear Adm. Thomas C. Hart, commander of the United States Asiatic Fleet, conferred aboard his flagship, the cruiser Augusta, with Col. DeWitt Peck, commandant of United States Marines in Shanghai, and Richard C. Butrick, United States Consul-General, on the incident. It was understood they planned to take the stand that the Japanese gendarmes have no right to maintain an office in the Bank and Communications Building, which is inside the disputed "B" defense sector of the International Settlement.

French Bar Hanoi Route

With the French Indo-China Army in the Field (Monday), Sept. 30 (U.P.)—French and Japanese armies in north Indo-China faced each other today, their lines several miles apart, with the French occupying a position of considerable natural defense strength barring the route to Hanoi.

The French forces are concentrated 70 miles northeast of the capital, their line thrown across the entrance to a valley with hills on either side.

There had been no fighting for three days, French officers said. The only firing was from Japanese "guerrilla" bands which the French said were roving the countryside. Japanese reconnaissance planes occasionally flew over the strong French positions.

Both the railroad and highway from northern Indo-China to Hanoi run through the valley blocked by the French, who have destroyed both railway and highway bridges leading into the valley.

At headquarters in a group of native buildings, French officers lamented that the United States had not released military planes to Indo-China last June when they first were requested.

The officers said that the loss of Langson, important railway point a few miles north, resulted largely from orders the French had to hold their fire unless actually attacked. This, they said, enabled the Japanese virtually to surround the city before launching their attack.

Traitors Guide Invaders

They said native traitors acted as guides for the Japanese moving troops into position. When the attack came, Langson was unable to hold out against terrific aerial and artillery bombardments which destroyed French antitank emplacements. The officers said many French, one American-born, were among the many prisoners the Japanese took at Langson, where a large portion of the Indo-Chinese army was disarmed.

Of this number, 140 Frenchmen thus far have escaped through the Japanese lines and rejoined their countrymen. Two such officers reached Hanoi yesterday, having walked 75 miles.

The French officers said the Japanese were busily distributing pamphlets to Indo-Chinese natives explaining Japan's plan for a "new order" in East Asia and warning them not to resist the Japanese Army.

The Japanese also were said to be inciting the natives against white men but the French officers discounted reports of torture deaths of Frenchman and said atrocity stories were exaggerated. They reported, however, that eight French soldiers who were caught trying to escape a prison stockade were slowly bayonetted to death.

Nazi Bombs Shower On British Docks

5,000 Tons Dropped, Great Fires Raging, Berlin Claims

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Sept. 29.—Nazi daylight raiders, braving the defenses of "Hell's corner," swarmed across the English Channel today, informed sources said, and showered bombs on Folkestone, Ramsgate and Clacton-on-Sea after a night of steady attacks on London, Liverpool and South England harbors.

Ten British planes were shot down today and Germany lost none, according to late reports received from aerial battlefields over Britain, D. N. B., official German news agency, said tonight.

[The British admitted losing two planes, and claimed seven Nazi planes.]

The harbors of east and south England and London were chief objectives of German raiders, but one squadron went as far as the Midlands for daylight attacks on armament works, said D. N. B.

[The Columbia Broadcasting System picked up a Berlin radio announcement, claiming a German raider, diving to a height of only 150 feet, unloaded the heaviest caliber bombs squarely into the center of the Rolls Royce aircraft motor plant at Derby, England, where "great havoc was wrought," according to the German broadcast.]

The high command, reporting on the Saturday assaults, asserted that "serious damage was inflicted on London's Silverton docks in Gravesend, the Tilbury docks, as well as the Thames Bend and East India docks."

Returning airmen declared great fires were still raging at Tilbury docks today. The high command said 5,000 tons of bombs had been dropped on England, and of this number 4,000 tons had been rained on London.

The German high command claimed Britain lost 28 planes to the Nazis' one yesterday, and also declared that German airmen sank two merchant vessels of some 6,000 tons in a convoy off the east Scottish coast.

R. A. F. night attacks on Germany were, as usual, minimized by the high command, which said that British bombers headed for Berlin were turned away by antiaircraft fire.

Bombs were dropped in west and southwest Germany without causing any "noteworthy damage," the communique said. It added that a residential section in a western German town was attacked and several persons were killed or injured.

Italian Press Warns U. S. On Interfering With Axis

By the Associated Press

Rome, Sept. 29.—Italian commentators warned the United States tonight that a bursting of the "myth of American power" and destruction of her army would result from United States intervention against the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo Axis plans for world rearrangement.

That warning appeared in Popolo d'Italia, whose commentator, Mario Appellus, devoted a long article analyzing the dangers faced by America if she tried to buck the triple alliance.

The entire Italian press was filled with warnings to America not to turn the Axis "peace pact" into a war pact. There were also simultaneous appeals to America's sense of responsibility" to abandon Britain to her fate.

Spain Promised Gibraltar

Restoration of Gibraltar to Spain is in the Axis' plan for the rearrangement of Europe and Africa, the authoritative Fascist editorial spokesman, Virginio Gayda, flatly declared today.

"New talks" in Berlin prove that Spain figures in the "immediate scheme of things," said Gayda, who specifically indicated for the first time that Spain, which heretofore has been regarded as only a sympathetic friend like Japan, is now to be considered an active partner in the world-girdling Axis line-up.

He avoided saying in so many words, however, that Spain will enter the war.

[The New York Times, forecasting early announcement in Rome of "some sort of agreement with Spain," reasoned, however, that Gen. Franco is in no position yet to participate in the war against England, because his badly needed food imports would be promptly cut off by the British blockade. German-Italian seizure of Gibraltar for Spain, the Times pointed out, would feed no starving Spaniards.

Ciano Starts Home

["However," said the Times, "after all that has been printed in the Axis press about Spain during the last few weeks, it is clear that prestige demands some result. The problem will then be whether Spain can do anything without antagonizing England too much . . . Spain's problem, as seen from here, is to delay her entry until England is as close to defeat as France was," when Italy declared war.]

The flat declaration that Spain is to be rewarded by acquisition of the "rock" which Britain has held for 236 years as a symbol of her empire strength, was made by Gayda as Foreign Minister Ciano started home after conferences in Berlin with Adolf Hitler and Franco's No. 1 aide, Ramon Serrano Suner.

Serrano Suner, after his round of talks in Berlin, interspersed by a flying visit of Ribbentrop to Rome, is returning to Spain by way of Rome.

"Gibraltar is Spanish territory which Spain is redeeming for herself in the new European order," said Gayda.

He said the talks in Berlin yesterday "prove among other things that the Spanish problem figures in the immediate scheme of things, together with other problems elsewhere in Europe pertaining to the war, and in the objectives of the new order of the Axis."

While there was no hint of the way in which an attempt will be made to break Britain's grip on the western Mediterranean entrance, observers pointed out that Germany now has a common frontier with Spain by her occupation of France's Atlantic seaboard.

Also recalled was the opinion of neutral military observers in Spain that the two-day mass bombing of Gibraltar last week by French planes may have shown the rocky promontory to be useless as a naval base under a serious attack. The Italians themselves have bombed Gibraltar sporadically.

Two Big Worries Left

[An authoritative British source observed that "if there is to be any assigning of Gibraltar it would not be left to Italians and the British feel quite capable of looking after it."]

The apparent "clarification" of Spain's role in the war by the Berlin conferences left the Axis two big countries to worry about—the United States and Russia.

"Naturally our attention . . . is fastened on reports from the two great powers outside the conflict, America and Russia," said Giovanni Ansaldo, editor of Ciano's Leghorn daily, Il Telegraf, in a dispatch from Berlin.

Ansaldo took the view there was no reason for a break between Russia and Japan, nor a lessening of friendly relations with Germany and Italy as a result of the new tripower military accord.

But leading press commentators showed they were not sure of American reaction, although hoping the United States would not intervene.

Gayda declared the United States "cannot neglect its immense fortune, menaced by nobody, which it would put at stake if it allowed itself to be engulfed in an adventure which already has massacred all England's accomplices, great and small."

Ansaldo said Secretary Hull's comment on the Axis pact showed its "importance" was understood, despite an effort to discount it as a development which had been anticipated.

Attacks on U. S. Resumed

Madrid, Sept. 29 (AP).—The Spanish press, taking for granted that Spain has become a part of the expanding Rome-Berlin Axis, renewed its attacks today on the United States.

The official Spanish news agency, saying that Minister of Government Ramon Serrano Suner probably would go to Rome from Berlin before returning home, declared his visit to the German capital "definitely incorporates Spain into the new diplomatic system with which Hitler and Mussolini have gained so many resounding victories."

The newspaper ABC declared Washington apparently had "missed the significance" of the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo alliance, judging from the Cleveland speech of Undersecretary Welles.

Britain Nears Breaking Point With Rumania

5 English Subjects Seized, Maltreated By Bucharest Officers

By C. L. Sulzberger

Copyright by New York Times

Bucharest, Sept. 29.—Anglo-Rumanian diplomatic relations are dangerously near the breaking point. It is understood that Viscount Halifax, British foreign secretary, called in the Rumanian charge d'affaires in London today and demanded an explanation of the detention and maltreatment of five British subjects here. So far there is no indication that any answer has been given.

For the past three months the long-standing friendship between London and Bucharest has been steadily deteriorating. A series of steps taken here, beginning with the renunciation of the British guarantee and culminating in Rumania's statement that she is with the Axis "up to the hilt," have rapidly turned amity to enmity.

Rumania is not at present represented by a minister in London. Contacts with the British legation here are dwindling. Some British subjects report instances of rude treatment in the streets. Many Britishers think Rumania, with German prodding, will force a final break soon.

It is evident that Rumania intends to force the British out of the Ploesti oil district. It is now reliably reported that some German air and antiaircraft units, wearing mufti, have arrived there, presumably in order to improve its defenses. German sources circulate conjectures that the British may soon seek to bomb the oil well from the air.

The British legation continues to encourage its nationals to quit Rumania. Although denied by the legation, well-informed sources assert that British subjects are being privately warned that if they stay the legation cannot longer be responsible for them.

This morning Col. Geoffrey MacNab, British military attache, accompanied by the consul, called on the military authority with a letter from the British minister, Sir Reginald Hoare, making five demands concerning the English subjects who are still held incommunicado without formal charge, although government sources say evidence exists implicating them in a sabotage plot.

The letter requested that the prisoners be allowed to see the British consul immediately, be allowed to receive legal advice and be examined immediately by two physicians, one nominated by the British legation, one by the government. It is known the captives have been manhandled.

Parisians Find German Army Is Marching on Their Stomachs

Capital of Epicures Has Worst Shortage Of Food Since 1870; Cooks Baffled By Lack of Butter; Vin Ordinaire Scarce

By Robert Okin

Associated Press Staff Writer

Paris, Sept. 25 (via Berlin), delayed).—A true picture of Paris under German occupation in 1940 would have as one of its main panels a view of a food queue and one of a ration card.

Frenchmen say that never since the seige of 1870 has it been so difficult to obtain food in Paris.

For, as a people who always have eaten well and who hate to wait in line, Parisians have had some rude gastronomical shocks since the Germans arrived.

This one-time capital of good food has felt in its stomach the lack of transportation and the shattering of its economy.

Butter Gone, Cooks Baffled

When butter and oil disappeared completely, French cooks found themselves baffled. They might have been able to get something to cook, but they didn't know how to cook it.

Other staples, such as cheese, eggs and coffee reappeared, and rice, spaghetti, milk, chocolate and salt were scarce and obtained only after long waits in line.

The food-card system was conceded by most people to be fair, but, like so many French measures, it tends to be complicated. To the point was a newspaper cartoon which showed a child saying to a companion:

"Mama has gone to wait in line to get a card to avoid waiting in line."

Lines Form for Everything

Lines form for everything now. Hundreds fall in before coffee bars to get breakfast. Stores selling chocolate bars always have a huge audience on the days they are permitted to open. Crowds of people swinging tin pails or clutching empty bottles means somewhere ahead is either a dairy or a wine shop.

The lines always are three or four persons thick.

Restaurants thus far have managed to get sufficient food and those who eat out have been lucky, but new restrictions go into effect for them next month.

Shellfish Easy to Get

On the four days a week it may be sold, French pastry seems plentiful. One famous pastry and chocolate shop with branches in the United States sells ice cream and one can even get ice cream sodas and sundaes.

Lobsters, oysters and shellfish arrive almost daily and vintage wines can be bought either at stores or restaurants.

Ordinary "vin rouge," however, which French homes buy by the liter for a few francs, has become difficult to get.

Potatoes also are scarce.

Two Days Without Meat

Food rules which came in during the war—beef only four days a week, two days without meat, three days without pastry, ice cream or liquor—still are in force. The Vichy government recently prohibited aperitifs of more than 16 per cent alcoholic content. Beer, wine and champagne are available every day.

Another characteristic of the times is "national coffee," which contains some coffee and lots of chicory and coffee substitute. People drink it to have some excuse to go to a cafe.

Rationed and difficult to get is laundry and hand soap and one American here remarked:

"I haven't had a bath in three weeks and I'm getting to like it that way."

Argentina, Brazil Plan Trade Accord

Aim at Exchange Of Surpluses on A Barter Basis

Buenos Aires, Sept. 29.—Brazil and Argentina laid the groundwork today for a trade conference starting Thursday in which the two nations are expected to fall in step with the United States' plan for closer Western Hemisphere cooperation.

Informed sources here said the conference would try to arrange for the exchange of surpluses on a barter basis.

These sources declared that a temporary abandonment of free trade principles would not be regarded as significant at this time because of the European war.

Warren Lee Pierson, president of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, D. C., conferred recently with leaders in both countries. The conference was planned at the Havana Conference last July.

Out of the new conference, informants said, should come an Argentine market for Brazilian iron, rubber and textiles in exchange for a Brazilian market for Argentine shoes, fruits and vegetables.

A foreign ministry official said Argentina also would insist on an increase in wheat and flour exports in view of the large crop.

This is the first time in recent years that Argentina, usually holding herself aloof in inter-American economic affairs, has taken such a keen interest in New World economics.

Sunday Dedicated To Great Britain

Olympia, Wash., Sept. 29 (INS).—In honor of "the last great democracy in the old world now fighting in defense of ideals and the way of living which we in America hold most dear," a proclamation by Gov. Clarence D. Martin designated today as "Great Britain Sunday in the State of Washington."

Gov. Martin requested the people of the State to join with the churches in "praying that the people of Great Britain may be given grace to bear their suffering with unshaken courage, sustained by the faith that their suffering may serve moral and spiritual ends."

Triduum Will Open Tonight at Cathedral

Dedicated this year to peace and harmony among nations, the Little Flower triduum will open tonight at 8 at St. Matthew's Cathedral. Members and friends of the Little Flower Guild will attend.

Three days of prayer honoring St. Therese of the Child Jesus and the Holy Face, the triduum will have the Rev. Gilbert V. Hartke, of the Dominican House of Studies, Catholic University, speaking tomorrow and Wednesday at 8 p. m. on the "Life of the Little Flower."

Hygiene Class Planned

A class in home hygiene and care of the sick will be organized by the District Chapter of the Red Cross at 10 a. m. today at the District Chapter House, 1730 E street northwest. Miss Caroline E. Thomson, chapter instructor, will teach the class.

Price-Control Plan Held Inflationary

Industry Mobilization Program Criticized In Brookings Report

The War Department has been told that its industrial mobilization plan, once studied as a model by European countries, could not prevent a run-away price inflation that might disrupt the Nation's defense effort, it was learned yesterday.

The disclosure came in the publication of a Brookings Institution study of price control methods undertaken at the request of the War Department. The published volume is a condensed version of a confidential report submitted to the War Department recently.

The study also recommended suspension of Government restrictions on production and hours of work in wartime and proposed that wage-rates be controlled along with prices.

Noting that the present defense program is comparable economically to a war program, the study advised repeal of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Walsh-Healey Act and the Wage-Hour law as soon as full employment is achieved.

The author, Dr. Charles O. Hardy, was granted access to unpublished War Department files and National Archives material pertaining to the World War, the report revealed.

It emphasized that although the Joint Army and Navy Munitions Board cooperated with Dr. Hardy, the board was not responsible for his conclusions.

The study, which pins the chief responsibility for price inflation in previous wars upon Government monetary and private credit policies, pointed out that the industrial mobilization plan provides direct controls, but no machinery to coordinate these controls with fiscal and banking policy.

Rising prices, the study said, create "arbitrary and useless changes in the distribution of income," leading to "widespread social discontent and cleavages which militate against the united prosecution of the war." Astempts of labor groups to keep up with the soaring cost of living result in endless controversy and strikes that slow down proudction.

A chart of wholesale prices included in the report revealed that prices leaped upward from 50 to 125 per cent during each of the three major wars since 1800—the Napoleonic Wars, the Civil War and the World War.

To forestall such price inflation in the present war, the study recommended the creation of a War Finance Commission under the Industrial Mobilization Plan to coordinate fiscal, credit, foreign trade and wage policies.

Outlining a war or rearmament economy of near-totalitarian dimensions, the report charted three methods of preventing disastrous price advances: (1) Through fiscal policies, (2) through indirect controls and (3) by direct price-fixing.

Until the present industrial slack is taken up and full employment achieved, the report advocated the financing of defense by Government borrowing supported by bank credit expansion.

Once idle labor and idle plants are all at work, however, the Government should obtain its funds mainly from current national income, through taxation of bond sale to individuals.

Bond sale to banks, the report points out, expands bank credit and "gives the Government purchasing power without taking away a corresponding amount of money from the public." The result is that the increased demand forces prices up, since production cannot be increased further.

Indirect controls of price can be established by increasing the supply of scarce commodities and by limiting normal civilian consumption of goods necessary to the defense program, the study states.

The country's import trade should be encouraged by the elimination of protective tariffs; taxes on passenger automobiles should be increased and those on trucks lowered; civilian housing should be postponed by suspension of the activities of the Federal Housing Administration.

The study also recommends priority regulations to prevent the situation that arose in the World War when "steel plants were operating at only 33 per cent of capacity for lack of coal, while at the same time coal was being delivered to breweries and saloons."

All legislative restrictions on production, such as the AAA's crop control program, should be suspended, the report advised, and all limitations of working hours should be dropped unless they are advisable as health measures.

Direct price-fixing, the study said, should be resorted to only for materials which are scarce rather than for all goods through a general price ceiling. It added:

"Maximum prices to be paid by the Government for scarce essential war commodities should be established by a central authority and all Government war buying should be coordinated so as to avoid competition for limited supplies of materials."

Control over wages, the report recommended, should take the form of Government review of all collective bargains with power to veto wage increases. Other recommendations concerning labor included:

Employers having more than 20 employes should be forced to hire new labor through Federal employment exchanges; compulsory payment of time-and-a-half for overtime should be suspended; unemployment benefits should be curtailed to force reemployment.

"If labor is to make any economic contribution to the cost of war," the report added, "the cost of living (including the workers' burden of direct taxation) must rise more than the wage rates . . . though it need not rise more than total wage income as affected by increased employment."

Defense Sidelights

Bishop Manning Urges U.S. Aid

Bishop Manning

New York, Sept. 29 (AP).—Two high-ranking clergymen today urged Americans to help Great Britain while a third attacked President Roosevelt for "taking this country into war."

The Right Rev. William T. Manning, Protestant Episcopal bishop of New York, told 3,000 worshipers in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine that "it is our duty to give our immediate aid, without stint or limit, in every form available, to the people of Great Britain who are giving their lives and all that they have in this battle, which is ours as truly as it is theirs."

In a half-hour radio broadcast observing "Great Britain Sunday," the Right Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church, told the British people:

"We are aware that England is today the battleground not only of her own freedom but of the freedom of all nations and people who uphold Christian ideals. England stands today the bulwark of the Christian way of life."

Meanwhile, Dr. John Haynes Holmes, preaching to the congregation of Community Church at Town Hall, said: "Anything can be done with a people if they are only scared enough, and it is because the President has been making it his business to scare the people well nigh to death over Adolf Hitler that in name him as the first of those who are taking this country into war."

New York, Sept. 29 (AP).—A bottleneck in aircraft engine production has been solved by the foundry devoted exclusively to the moulding and casting of aluminum alloy cylinder heads, Myron B. Gordon, vice president and general manager of the Wright Aeronautical Corporation, said today.

The new foundry, at Fairlawn, N. J., has facilities for the uninterrupted performance of all operations from raw materials to finished cylinder heads, Gordon said the plant is approaching full production.

Already producing 300 per cent more aircraft engines in its Paterson, N. J., plants than a year ago, the Wright organization will shortly begin construction at Lockland, Ohio, of another aircraft engine factory, capable of producing an additional 1,000 engines monthly.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 29 (AP).—President C. Bedell Monroe of the Pennsylvania-Central Airlines announced today the sale of two twin-engine Boeing 247-D ten-passenger transport planes for use in training Canadian pilots for Great Britain.

Monroe said he understood the 3-mile-a-minute planes would be used for training pilots in the operation of multi-engined craft such as are in use by Britain in its offensive bombardment missions against Germany and Italy.

the signing of a Russian-Japanese pact of nonaggression.

[The Chunking newspaper China Times declared, however, it was "confident" Soviet Russia shortly will join the "democratic front against aggressors." International News Service said some Chinese circles believe Russia is now confronted with the necessity of taking some step to counter any strengthening of Japan's campaigns in China and to prevent the new Berlin alliance from creating Japanese threats to Soviet interests in the Far East.]

Moscow newspapers also published without comment statements of the United States press pointing to enhanced chances of a British victory over the Axis powers.

Secretary Hull's reply to the signing of the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo pact was published and both the official government and Communist Party newspapers, Izvestia and Pravda, carried a long analytical and documented article on an economic upsurge in the United States.

This economic rise, the article said, resulted from the rearmament program and a swelling volume of exports to Great Britain.

Chungking, Sept. 29 (AP).—China feels no anxiety over Japan's addition to the Rome-Berlin Axis, informed political sources declared today, because Germany and Italy already have shown their inability to aid Japan's Asiatic conquest.

The only reflection of official opinion was an editorial in the Central Daily News which called the tri-power pact a hollow pretense, with Germany and Italy seeking Japanese assistance in Europe and Japan seeking Axis support in Asia.

Neither is possible, it argued, because of geographic distances and the military weakness of the signatories.

This view, it was learned, is held in high Chinese quarters: The new pact is a military complement to the unsuccessful anti-Comintern pact and is a threat both to the United States and the Soviet Union.

Moscow's silence was taken as disapproval because of the belief here that the pact intends to exclude the U. S. S. R. both from Europe and Asia. This opinion sees the United States between threats of attack from two oceans.

Premature Project

Senate approval of a bill authorizing the construction of a toll bridge near Great Falls seems somewhat premature. A bridge in this region will undoubtedly be useful and desirable when the George Washington Memorial parkway has been completed, affording a better approach to the falls along the Potomac River. Such a bridge would also serve as a convenient bypass around Washington if tied in with other highway systems of Virginia and Maryland.

It will be some time, however, before the Memorial highway project reaches a stage calling for bridge construction as contemplated. In view of the many projects of an immediately pressing nature requiring attention, there appears to be little excuse for building another bridge across the Potomac before highway approaches have been sufficiently developed to assure its full utilization.

The Senate bill raises a number of other debatable issues. It provides for bridge tolls to pay the cost of construction and maintenance until the bonded debt could be repaid. Thereafter the bridge would be turned over to the States of Virginia and Maryland to be operated free of tolls.

Since the structure would be connected with a Federal highway, a strong case could be made out for vesting ownership in the Federal Government as recommended by Chairman Delano of the National Capital Parks and Planning Commission. In that event, a question would arise as to the desirability of collecting tolls to cover construction costs. Strong opposition to such a policy would certainly be encountered.

Senate passage of the bill appears to have resulted from inertia or indifference since the proposal was voted without debate. The measure had no positive support from official planning agencies. In fact, the Federal Works Agency is opposed to the project, while the Parks and Planning Commission merely states that it has no objections to the plan. Under these circumstances, the House may well postpone action until the need for the projected bridge becomes more urgent.

In Praise Of Work

In an opening address to the students of Columbia University, President Nicholas Murray Butler reverted to an old-fashioned theme, appropriately introduced by this quotation from an old-fashioned poet, Longfellow:

". . . the joy
That springs from labor."

Dr. Butler reminded his hearers that work is the "fundamental activity of our civilization" and "not a form of oppression or of punishment." Something is, indeed, wrong when it no longer seems commonplace to remind young men of college age that work is an indispensable prerequisite to enjoyment of the good things of life.

But the pressure to reduce hours of work and curb productive output is not, as Dr. Butler seems to imply, solely the result of failure to realize the pleasure that flows from work well done. Working restrictions imposed by statute and by trade union regulations are frequently carried to unreasonable extremes. Yet it is impossible to agree with Dr. Butler when he says: "Every attempt, by whatever authority, to fix a maximum of productive labor by a given worker in a given time is an unjust restriction upon his freedom and a limitation of his right to make the most of himself in order that he may rise in the scale of the social and economic order in which he lives."

If workers were engaged on isolated tasks, this dictum might hold true. But modern industry calls for the cooperative efforts of many men. The work schedule has to be adjusted to the capacity of the average man. The pace cannot be set by the fastest. Abuses of the speed-up, which often exhausts even the pacemakers, are well-known. Such overexertion destroys the joy of labor and makes it mere slavery. So restrictions must often be imposed upon individual output, thus handicapping the worker who is able to surpass his fellows. The fact that such regulations have been carried too far in many cases is no argument for complete freedom from all restraint.

Just as in business the rules of competition have to be defined to save smaller concerns from extinction, so working conditions have to be regulated for the benefit of the great majority. The great problem of the present day is how to protect the interests of the many without closing the door of opportunity to the smaller number in all walks of economic life who have greater innate capacity.

Dr. Butler has directed attention to the danger of unduly restrictive trends. But he has not offered a practicable alternative in suggesting that each man should be free to work as long and as hard as he chooses. Laissez-faire has very limited applicability to the complex world of modern industry.

Russia's Role

Of the world's six great powers five have a direct concern in the newly created triple alliance.

There are, first of all, the three signatories—Germany, Italy and Japan. They have agreed to pool their political, economic and military resources in the event any one of them is "attacked by a power at present not involved in the European war or in the Chinese-Japanese conflict." There is Great Britain, which is at war with the Axis nations and now faces increased pressure from the side of Japan. And there is the United States, the nation against whom the pact is primarily directed.

The only remaining great power is Soviet Russia. Where does she belong in the line-up of forces?

The text of the Berlin accord makes it clear that the signatories are anxious to keep Russia friendly. Thus Article 5 declares that: "Germany, Italy and Japan affirm that the aforesaid terms do not in any way affect the political status which exists at present as between each of the three contracting parties and Soviet Russia." And inspired comment in Berlin, Rome and Tokyo suggests that Russia will be taken care of in the establishment of the "new order in Europe" and the "new order in Greater East Asia."

Just what this portends is far from clear. In Europe Russian neutrality was bought by Hitler at a stiff price. The installments are labeled Poland, the Karelian Isthmus, Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Bessarabia and Northern Bukovina. Will Stalin now be promised further territorial concessions in Europe and possibly the Near and Middle East to keep him inactive? And what will Japan have to give Russia to enable the island empire to proceed with the creation of the "new order in Greater East Asia" without hindrance from the Kremlin?

The price, if any can be agreed on, would have to be a high one. Already there are rumors that Russia may demand the abandonment by Japan of her fisheries in the Kamchatka area, the cancellation of Japanese oil, coal and other concessions in Northern Sakhalin, the demolition of all fortifications on the Korean and Manchurian frontiers and the renunciation of all Japanese aspirations in Outer Mongolia.

There is no certainty that Japan will agree to make such far-reaching concessions. But if she fails to win Russian friendship the danger of an embroilment with the Soviet Union at a time when relations with the United States are moving from bad to worse will hang like a sword of Damocles over her head.

In attempting to blackmail the United States as they are now obviously trying to do, the Axis powers, and particlarly Japan, may have left themselves wide open to blackmail by Russia. And there is no reason to believe that Stalin will not capitalize this opportunity to the full.

The Oil Suit

The Department of Justice has decided to go ahead with its plans for prosecuting 22 major oil companies charged with price-fixing and other unfair and discriminatory practices injurious to independent producers. However, following the advice of the Defense Commission it will not attempt to deprive these companies of their pipe lines and other transportation facilities, as originally intended. As Attorney General Jackson has explained in a letter addressed to Senator Gillette, such action would create serious problems for national defense and would for that reason be highly inopportune.

Mr. Jackson's comments on the need for constructive legislation to deal with the problems of the oil industry are highly significant. He points out that court decrees are "in the main negative affairs forbidding certain acts, combinations and contracts." He recognizes that an effort to apply the antitrust laws to the oil industry with a view to forcing it to become more competitive is actually against the public interest. What the country needs, as he says, is conservative utilization of irreplaceable oil resources rather than inevitably wasteful competitive exploitation.

The oil companies, although charged with conspiring to restrict production, are at the same time helping to conserve supplies and to combat certain wasteful competitive practices. That, too, the Attorney General concedes, but he objects to these private conservation plans on the ground that they fail to protect the interests of the general public and of independent producers. We are left to conclude, therefore, that Mr. Jackson anticipates only negative results from the prosecution of the oil suits. He also intimates strongly that he expects the case to be long drawn out.

Unless the antitrust laws are to become a dead letter, however, the Department of Justice cannot ignore flagrant violations of the prohibitions contained in those laws. But the oil industry, under legal compulsion to operate competitively although the public interest calls for regulated production, is certainly in need of legislative relief.

Consequently, Mr. Jackson urges Congressional action of a comprehensive character to protect our oil reserves. He well says that "litigation by itself will never completely accomplish the wise utilization of this great asset (oil) by this generation or its conservation for the future."

The Jesuit Jubilee

The year 1540 found the western world in a state of profound moral, political and economic upheaval, torn among apparently irreconcilable philosophies. The new learning and the new worship of antiquity had introduced among some educated groups a new paganism over which Christianity was the thinnest of veneers. Meanwhile the young and vigorous religious movement called Protestantism was sweeping like a flood over Europe. There were many who believed that it must inevitably wash away the whole edifice of the ancient and, as it then seemed, decadent Papal system.

The reformist pontificate of Hadrian VI had been a brief and pitiful failure. He had been succeeded first by another Medici and then by a Farnese. A Christendom long habituated to scandal had been treated to what must have seemed the ultimate scandal in the sack of Holy Rome by the soldiers of the Holy Roman Emperor.

Such was the condition of Europe and of the Catholic Church when the famous bull of Pope Paul III regularized the Society of Jesus, a small newly formed group of enthusiasts led by that remarkable personality, Ignatius Loyola. Their single purpose was the rehabilitation of Catholicism and defense of the Papacy. They were bound to their General and to the Pope by an oath of utter obedience in all matters, except of course sin.

The story of the Jesuit order in the next hundred years, and especially under its great Father General, Acquiviva, is one of the most amazing chapters in history The missionary exploits and adventures of the Jesuits over four continents, their heroisms, martyrdoms and triumphs, form a tale more strange and wonderful than the wildest romances. From Japan to Paraguay, from India to New France they could number their converts in millions.

No less remarkable were their accomplishments in science and education. That curious understanding of both the capabilities and limitations of human nature exhibited in the "Spiritual Exercises," which anticipates so much of modern psychology, is also reflected in the famous Ratio Studiorum. If many of these educational ideas are now commonplace, it is because the Jesuit educational system has been so widely imitated.

But the success and influence of their schools were pointed by some conspicuous failures. From their own viewpoint the Jesuits would probably include among these failures Descartes, Voltaire, James Joyce and Josef Goebbels.

The history of most religious orders shows a period of expansion and achievement, followed by a period of decline, followed in turn by a period of reform and revival. Jesuit history conforms in general to this pattern. The period of decline which culminated in a temporary suppression of the order is generally dated from its famous seventeenth century controversy with the Jansenists over the doctrine of grace. It was this dispute which brought into the ever-growing ranks of their enemies, within and without the Catholic faith, one who was to prove more dangerous to them than all the rest combined, the brilliant Blaise Pascal.

Last week, thoroughout a world which must have seemed to them strangely like the violent, disorganized and demoralized world into which their order was born, the Jesuits celebrated their four hundredth anniversary.

"One Song As Fine As Fire"

(From the Christian Science Monitor)

There's a man in London, so it seems, who isn't getting a proper night's rest. It's because of noise, of course. And he has complained to the authorities. One might think he would complain to "that there 'Itler" or at least desist from adding to the decibel dilemma that London authorities must face. For, one might suppose, there is only one way to lessen noise in London now, and that is by refraining from adding the din of antiaircraft fire to the din of bombs.

But that isn't the problem at all. Who said anything about bombs and antiaircraft batteries? Not our Londoner. Evidently he regards them as New Yorkers and other American cliff dwellers do their elevated trains. They make a noise which is part of the routine. "You get used to it in no time." But what a chap can't put up with is the other fellow's radio, or, as in the case of our Londoner, a neighbor's rooster.

This rooster wakes him every morning at the crack of dawn, and something's got to be done about it. Possibly carrying over the blackout until 8 or 9 o'clock every morning would help to keep Chanticleer quiet. But as things are now, a man can't hear an air raid properly when

. . . the cock with lively din
Scatters the rear of darkness thin.

Yet, being British, too, surely this rooster should be encouraged patriotically to "Stab upward with your noise; Tear at the sky." However unwelcome Mr. Rooster's matins are to a Londoner, it is heartening to Britain's friends elsewhere to realize that not all the crowing these days is being done in the Axis capitals.

Pin-Ball Games

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One of our most unfortunate civic situations at the present time is that of the pin-ball machine, that Congress has, from time to time, considered taxing.

Now it is a well known fact that this machine is a gambling device, although from a legal point of view it is not considered so. I might add that by placing one of these machines in your place of business and telling the public not to gamble on it, is like giving a bottle of gin to a rum sot and telling him not to drink it.

Another distressing feature is that it encourages young children to put their small allowances into it, in the hope of winning free games.

We all know that the parents of today have neither the time nor the will to teach their children differently. Therefore, why not have the shopkeepers turn back about 25 years and forbid children to loiter around such devices?

We cannot abolish the pin-ball machine, but we can stop children from playing them, even if we have to administer a little of the old horse and buggy day sternness. Let's try it. J. BURFORD RODIER.

Campaign Preferences

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Yes, as an Independent voter, I'm casting my ballot for Willkie in November.

Here's why:

Both the Republican and the Democratic parties have something to offer. We have got all possible good out of the Democrats for the time being. It is time for them and particularly for their leaders to take a back seat and give the new boy a chance. INDEPENDENT.
Washington, Sept. 26.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We are beginning to think Willkie is good after all. He may imitate Roosevelt in everything but he certainly works faster.

It will take a third term, according to his opponents, to make a dictator out of Roosevelt. But here is Willkie, an honest to goodness, resident of Indiana, dictating the nomination of Bruce Barton as Senator from New York and he has never held office for a day.

No Gentlemen

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Hitler boasts there will be no gentlemen in Nazified Europe.

He's right. A gentlemen is a man who keeps his word.

Broken promises are Hitler's policy. Perjury is a Nazi tool. Germany has no place for a man who cannot lie and dupe the fools who listen. MAURISH O'HAAGEN.

Prayers For Peace

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am an Episcopalian and I love my church and all its sacred traditions and associations. I love England with its history, its literature and all that is fine and beautiful in its life.

But I must disagree with certain of our prominent clergy and others in appointing a day of special prayers for Great Britain in her present struggle. Regardless of our personal sympathies, we can and should pray privately for what we believe to be best, but my objection is in making corporate prayer for one belligerent.

We, of course, all pray for "all sorts and conditions of men" and for a just and lasting peace which is "the fruit of righteousness," but the action mentioned, however sincerely and devoutly intended, will naturally have the effect of leading many people to believe it our religious duty to follow up that prayer with active alignment with Great Britain in the war. If that is our purpose and belief, then let us do so without pretense and acknowledge that we are no more than an English church and confine our interests accordingly.

Let us pray even more earnestly for the nations of the world that they may be led into the ways of truth and justice and to that peace which is the fruit of righteousness, and not merely for victory for one belligerent. In that let us all devoutly join.

How Children Act

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The length newspapers will go to make news exciting, also ridiculous, beats everything. All this reporting when steamers are sunk at sea, that children sing while they are in danger of drowning, is all rot. And to make things more ridiculous, every time the children sing the same song—a beer song—called "Roll Out the Barrel."

Common sense tells everyone that little children could not possibly act in that way. It is not human nature in face of such calamity. The writer of this letter was on a shipwrecked steamer, with British children and women, and there was only terror and screaming on the part of both children and women, and the men were not so awfully composed either. A CANADIAN.

For Democracy

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the book section of the Sunday Post of September 22, John T. Appleby gives an excellent review of "Dusk at Dawn," the autobiography of the Negro leader, W. E. B. Du-Bois. However, in his last paragraph Mr. Appleby says of the book: 'It comes, unfortunately, at a most inopportune time. We are, just now, too busy with our preparations to save Western civilization to give much thought to this great challenge to our democracy."

May I suggest that, on the contrary, the book appears at a most opportune time. The only way the best in Western civilization can be saved is by proving that democracy is superior to totalitarianism. To the extent that our democracy is limited, to that extent it is weak. Moreover, if we are to save ourselves from the totalitarian threat we must have the help of our whole population.

INA CORINNE BROWN.

For British Aid

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I send a message through you to your readers, thousands of whom I know are anxious—even desperate—in their eagerness to express in constructive form their infinite sympathy for Britain and her cause.

On my return from London in June I had one burning desire which was to find the organization in which I could be of most use. After weeks of inquiry and wasted effort—even anguish—I found it, and I would like to pass this knowledge on to those men and women who, like me, want to do what they can to help and yet don't know how to go about it.

The British War Relief Society was organized in September, 1939, with the approval of the British Ambassador, to coordinate organizations working for Great Britain. It has grown swiftly in recent weeks. Today there are 200 branches in the United States with over 30,000 contributors whose cash donations total more than $800,000.

Ambulances, surgical instruments, drugs and medicines, woolen knitted goods, clothing, "kitchens on wheels," equipment and supplies for hospital beds, surgical bandages, medical dressings, X-ray units and other vital materials leave New York harbor week after week from the British War Relief Society.

The society sends these essential supplies and comforts to the men of the fighting forces, to their wives and children, to the homeless thousands evacuated from bombed areas, to other thousands of destitute refugees who poured into Britain from conquered European democracies.

Emergency and unexpected requests from Britain are met instantly. To cite one example, a cry for assistance came some weeks ago from St. Dunstan's, the hospital for blinded soldiers, started during the last war, and carried on ever since. Funds were needed at once to cope with some hundred blinded men arriving from Dunkerque. Within the hour the British War Relief Society had bought and sent by cable a check on London.

Because of this efficient organization, because of organized American sympathy—yours and mine—these gallant and tragic men received medical aid forthwith. Instant action, such as this, may mean that these men do not all walk henceforth in utter darkness. This story inspires us to give our wholehearted cooperation in making such help possible.

Help of all kind is urgent now—at once! The need is imperative. Perhaps never before has individual effort been so important. Whatever you can do, or give, in small or great measure, do or give it quickly—now—immediately!

Remember, time presses! Emergencies multiply rapidly! Grim suffering, stark horror are increasing hourly! Let those of us whose sympathies are with the British, those of us who are still safe from the nightmare of war, be swift to act.

MRS. KERMIT ROOSEVELT.

Takes Issue With Dr. Gallup

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As an ardent follower of the current political campaign I have found the Gallup Poll an interesting, if not too accurate, barometer of the personal political sentiments of Americans in each of the forty-eight States. I have used the phrase "if not too accurate" rather advisedly, in my mind, for two reasons. The most recent State-by-State tabulation from last Friday's Post reports a 51 per cent preference for President Roosevelt in Wisconsin, while the recent primaries in the "Badger State" showed a Republican registration in excess of the combined totals of Progressive and Democratic camps.

However, of more far-reaching significance, to me, is my own personal poll conducted during a two-day sojourn in the nearby State of Delaware.

I found Willkie sentiment that widespread, approaching unanimity, on all lips. I talked to innkeepers, a public utility branch manager, a cottage caretaker's family and a hardware store proprietor, all from the resort town of Rehoboth Beach. I chatted with a railroad official from Wilmington and to a spinster from that city. I spoke with a housewife from the capital at Dover. I saw Willkie banners on the bumpers of truck farmers' Fords. I heard native lips say "Yes, sir, there are plenty of us Democrats going to vote for Willkie," and others opine that they had rather have an opportunity to work with a chance for advancement than to be a Relief-Roller with a guaranteed $30 per month, ad infinitum.

I talked to these people, people from all income groups, from every religious faith, from many age classifications, and I did so purposely, for I had noticed, with my tongue in my cheek, that Dr. Gallup was consigning Delaware to the President's column by a margin of 60 to 40, in his last summary. Had I returned from the "Blue Hen State" with the impression of divided sympathies, no matter how divergent, I would not now be taking issue with the Gallup tabulation, but because I found such near 100 per cent Willkie strength I find it interesting to record my reactions.

The Post Impressionist

Centenary: "Th: Nast"

"I WOULD very much like to see Mr. Nast again," said President Grant to a friend of the celebrated cartoonist. It was early in 1872; Grant looked toward his reelection and further help from the potent pencil. "Two things elected me," Grant had observed after his first Presidential victory; "the sword of Sheridan and the pencil of Thomas Nast."

His renomination in 1872 was certain but he faced a bitter struggle and the opposition of a faction of his own party—a group including Charles Sumner and Carl Schurz. Nast wanted to look over the situation at first hand. Success had crowned his slashing series of cartoons against Tweed thievery in New York; in the national political battle a new task loomed. "To see myself how things are—at least as I can see them," he came to Washington.

Invited to dine with the President and his family at 5 o'clock, Nast had a "very pleasant time" and "did not get away from the White House until nearly 10." "It seemed very homelike, indeed," he wrote to Mrs. Nast, home in Morristown, N. J. "No nonsense, no show, but the real thing."

Official Washington made a fuss over the 31-year-old cartoonist of Harper's Weekly. (He was born in Bavaria September 27, 1840.) "Everybody tells me everything," he wrote his wife; they all have their little troubles to pour out, and I listen to them all." On the floor of the Senate and of the House he had "quite a reception." Vice President Schuyler Colfax, Supreme Court Justices and Cabinet members were present at a party for him on February 1, 1872. On the fourth he dined with Speaker Blaine. The following night, at dinner, he sat next to Secretary of State Fish. Piloted by the wife of a friend, he called on ladies, who "are all as much interested in my pictures as the menfolks." Feminine interest in his work seemed to him "strange." Among the guests at a dinner in his honor on February 7 was "Roosevelt of New York." This guest, President Roosevelt explained a few days ago, was probably Robert B. Roosevelt, an uncle of T. R.

The social whirl kept Nast from his drawing board but it brought him much material. "Everything here goes so well I'm afraid something will happen at home," he confided to his wife. "Now, if you were only here, it would be all right." Sarah Nast wouldn't leave the children.

Nearly every day he saw Grant and on February 9 spent two hours with the President. At Blaine's reception, Senator Reuben E. Fenton, dissatisfied with the picture Nast had been using as a model, promised him a new portrait. The Senator was not the only statesman anxious that Nast have "his best picture to work from." Confessing fright over his power in politics, Nast besought his wife to "keep watch" on him. "You will not let me use it in a bad cause." Homesickness appears in his letters, but copyright matters held him in Washington. He dined again with Grant, "had a fine time." Gen. Horace Porter told him "no one had been so nicely received at the White House" as he.

Although from some quarters, including his editor's office, came censure "for making fun of Schurz, Sumner, etc.," the cartoonist, back at work in New York, carried on in behalf of the soldier-President by pictorially attacking the critical coterie. "I try," Nast once said, "to hit the enemy between the eyes and knock him down."

In March, visiting Washington again, he was presented to Schurz, who looked down, literally and figuratively, at the short artist and said: "You will not be allowed to continue your attacks upon me."

"Why not, Senator?"

"Your paper will not permit them."

"Oh, I think it will," Nast retorted. Editor George William Curtis had finally stopped protesting.

"Well, then, I will not!" snapped the bearded solon. "I shall publicly chastise you.

Tom Nast only laughed. Even "The Tower of Strength," as he pictured Schurz, couldn't intimidate the artist who for three years defied the Tweed ring with its gangster henchmen. In his cartoons he laughed, too. And now Horace Greeley became the principal target of his art of ridicule. Nast drew the Colossus of Chappaqua on a chair, in Pickwickian pose and apparel, addressing Republican "liberals" and Democratic former enemies. On the wall hung Greeley's familiar white hat and coat, marked "Hands Off; These Are Sacred." In the cartoon the spindle-legged Schurz smoked contentedly.

As the "campaign of hate" (Roscoe Conkling's phrase) continued, Nast's pencil became sharper. Even Albert Bigelow Paine, his ardent biographer, reproves him for the "ferocity" of some of the Greeley cartoons. But, for all their sting, Paine points out, they seldom lacked a comic touch. Grant said his "pictures are full of fine humor."

After the election, Greeley was drawn prostrate on the field of the National Tournament, with triumphant Grant still upon his steed. (Before the month was out, Greeley was dead.) Carl Schurz, repudiated in Missouri, was pictured in a waste basket.

Nast's fan mail was enormous. "Nast, you more than any other man have won a prodigious victory for Grant—I mean, rather, for civilization and progress," wrote one correspondent, Mark Twain. Nast and his wife went to Washington for the second inauguration. It was shadowed by the scandal of the Credit Mobilier. On the eve of the inaugural, Mr. Grant received the couple. Mrs. Nast mentioned the crowd jamming the Capital. "Yes," the President replied, "but I feel like a man who is going to be hung tomorrow."

On The Record

The New Pact

THE German - Italian - Japanese pact ought to make clear to Americans, if there are any who still need convincing, that this is no European war, but a world revolution for the redistribution of the entire planet. That's what it was intended to be in the beginning; that's what it is; and in the nature of things it is directed as much against us as against anybody else.

THE ORIGINAL anti-Comintern pact was between Germany, Italy and Japan. It was a pact designed for war. It was hoped to attract Great Britain into the orbit and, if that failed, to keep Great Britain deluded with the idea that Russia was the only victim intended for slaughter.

Great Britain was not attracted to the Axis, first because of a very sound realization that the program of Nazi Germany is like the program of Rome: "She made subjects of her allies, and slaves of her vassals." Secondly, it was impossible because the British masses believe in democracy and abhor Nazism; third, because the people of Great Britain care deeply for the friendship of the United States.

Failing to conciliate Great Britain, the Axis secured the more or less benevolent neutrality of Russia, thus postponing the reckoning with that country. It will come, if the Axis is victorious, just as it would have come, eventually, with Great Britain if Britain had not been prepared to relinquish or share with the Axis powers her colonial possessions and her strategic bases in the Far East, in the Near East and in the Western Hemisphere. Thus, eventually, and in any case, there would have been the basis of conflict with us.

THE AXIS has functioned in regard to Japan just as it functioned in regard to Italy. Germany started the war in Poland with the clear understanding that the move would involve Britain and France. Italy entered at the precise moment agreed upon—with the collapse of France. Germany could, it was reckoned, handle France by herself; for the war with Britain she would need Italy. Had the Battle of Britain succeeded this fall, by a few weeks' "blitzkrieg" after the pattern of France, then Japan probably would not have been invoked at this moment. With the citadel of the British Empire in Axis hands, the Near Eastern and Far Eastern possessions and Commonwealth members could have been cleaned up between the three Axis partners.

Now, by the roundabout route of Japan, Germany and Italy manage to send what amounts to an ultimatum to the United States. If the U. S. A. moves in Europe or joins the war on the side of any Axis enemy, all three powers regard her as an enemy. It is probable that some pressure was brought upon Japan to get her to sign this pact. Russia may have been useful—the suggestion that unless Japan came in now, Russia might be given a free hand in the Far East.

WE SEE with more and more clarity the preposterous folly of a policy whereby, in the face of a world-wide alliance, with strategical positions throughout the planet—Germany on the European continent and in the Baltic and North Seas; Italy in the Mediterranean, and Japan in the Pacific—the other countries of the world, designed to be the victims of this Axis, have persisted each one in pursuing a lone and solitary program called "neutrality."

If ever there was a time when the words "United we stand, divided we fall" had meaning, it has been the period since the Axis came into being.

I have said it before and I say it again: We have elected to Congress a lot of men who don't know that the earth is round, because it is flat where they happen to be standing. The conquest of the planet is not impossible; it is only impossible in unimaginative minds. Caesar conquered what there was of the planet a long time ago. It is easier now than then—and is going ahead a great deal faster.

WE NEED to think in larger terms and we need to think in terms of more acute accuracy.

The Battle for Britain is not a battle for an overcrowded scrap of geography. The Battle for Britain is the Battle for the Atlantic Ocean, just as the Battle for France with Britain was the Battle for the Mediterranean and the seaways to Africa, the Near East and Asia.

If the European Fascist powers control the Atlantic from Europe, and Japan controls the Pacific from Asia, this country will be penned in by the oceans and will be finished as a great power. We shall either accept this dictum or not accept it. Not accepting it will mean war, and war alone, by ourselves.

They do small service to their country who scream "war-monger" at everybody, including the President, who seeks to present, not some wish-dream, but the stark reality.

THE AXIS is ingenious in revealing who its enemies really are at just the right moment. A very good moment is in the last weeks of an election campaign in the United States. A very good moment is when an armament program is just getting under way and when the United States may be scared into slowing down. Also, the European end of the Axis may greatly hope that our attention will now be diverted to the Far East—our attention and our defense effort. I hope we are not so easily diverted. The United States stands or falls in the Far East with Great Britain. We stand or fall in both the Atlantic and the Pacific with Great Britain. The disposition of affairs in the Far East will depend upon the outcome in Europe and in the Atlantic. Japan knows this—otherwise, why the Axis and why the new pact?

WHAT THE MINIMUM German war aims really are is ingenuously revealed by Dr. Schacht, who is writing down a blueprint for the new World Germanica, in a book to be published at the right moment. Via Sweden, an outline of this book fell into the hands of a few of us. The Nation brought the text of the outline, without comment, on September 7.

Dr. Schacht announces quite simply that the real objects of this war are the breaking of the "plutocracies"—namely, Great Britain and the United States. The Japanese angle reveals itself in the plan that after this war the United States is to have no interests whatsoever, commercial or otherwise, in the Pacific. We are to be allowed to trade exclusively with Europe—which needs some of our products—and with South America, where, far from having a "Sphere of Influence," we are to be apportioned "quotas." We are to be allowed to trade only through a monopolistic import-export syndicate, to be set up for the whole continent of Europe, necessitating the end of individual trading in this country and the establishment of a similar government monopoly here. We shall be invited to stabilize our currencies together with Japan, Russia and pan-Fascist Europe, and merge the banking system; but Germany will keep the rubber mark for merchandise and tourist trade. The debts of all Germany's vassals will be recognized in principle, but will be paid in goods.

For Latin-America, which lives by exports, this system will mean economic strangulation or collaboration, and we shall eventually have the Axis at our gates.

THIS COUNTRY needs allies. It needs them immediately and desperately. We ought to reverse our limited thinking. It is not and never has been a question of whether the British Empire needs us; it is a question whether we need the British Empire. We do. We need every nation and every people that we can range up on our side. We need to establish that unity of defense and that collaboration of economic policy which the Axis has established for the purpose of putting a crowbar under the planet. If Britain is defeated, we shall be alone against the world. Invaded or not invaded, we shall live on the terms of the conquerors and be back where we were in 1776.

Finally, our defense program is utterly inadequate. It will not be adequate until we recognize a state of emergency and mobilize the entire man power, machine power and money power of this country for defense, letting everything else take second place.

Fair Enough

"Thieves And Fakers"

ALL TOLD I have received, I suppose, a thousand letters from individual little people who have been kicked around, deprived of their right to work, robbed and cheated by labor unions under the authority and protection of President Roosevelt's labor policy. These people are unorganized, afraid, and, in many cases, desperate, and it seems very unlikely that they will vote for Mr. Roosevelt in November, although as yet Mr. Willkie has offered them no reason to hope that he will give them any relief. Mr. Willkie is on a spot, because if he should blast the crooks and dictators of the union movement and promise to break their brutal power over the little people every labor faker in the country would immediately damn him as an enemy of Labor with a capital L.

The citizens who are individual victims of the labor skates can only hope that Mr. Willkie has some mental reservations and intends, if elected, to proceed against the thieves and fakers. That seems to be their only hope, because Mr. Roosevelt is playing ball with the boss unioneers.

ASIDE FROM ONE very coy reference to the rare, occasional scoundrel in union leadership, the President has never mentioned this oppression of American citizens by unofficial but harsh and arrogant dictators, many of them crooks of the meanest sort. It may be observed that even that mild condemnation was not gratuitous. It was wrung out of him.

The disclosures which have been made in the last year—with no help, incidentally, from his Muscovite Labor Relations Board—finally became so scandalous and the facts were so authentic that Mr. Roosevelt had to take some notice of them. That is Mr. Roosevelt's way. He took no action to compel State, county and municipal employes to pay Federal income taxes until their outrageous exemption had been shown up in print for about a year, and he was dead sure that the people who would personally resent a change were vastly outnumbered by those who would approve it.

I AM AN UTTER novice in politics, but in my dumb, instinctive way I figure that the big national bosses of various unions are merely touting when they assure Mr. Roosevelt that "the labor vote" will support him. I just don't believe they can speak for their members, many of whom, I am certain, fiercely resent their pretentions to leadership. During the last years incalculable numbers of little people have been driven into unions against their will, harassed and persecuted, and without gaining a dollar beyond the amount which was promptly snatched back by the thieves representing the unions.

Nobody can tell me that people who have been the victors of this kind of doing feel loyal to the union movement or kindly toward any candidate who builds up the prestige of the boss unioneers by complimenting them in public. These little people might not have been quite so resentful if the unions had been comradely or half-decent to them. As it is, they hate their unions and hate the business agents and local and international officials who treat them as if they were serfs—as, in fact, they are.

IF YOU ARE a worker earning so little money that the Internal Revenue doesn't even ask you to file an income tax return, and some union then makes you pay $75, cash, to joint and from $2 to $10 a month in dues and buy $2 worth of tickets every three months, you are not going to cheer for unionism. You are going to be sore, and the little woman is going to figure that money in terms of milk and food and clothing which the children deserved but didn't get.

I don't want to hear anything about the rarity of the union scoundrel. I know better. The thief and extortioner is more common than rare, but that question aside, the damned spot that will not out is the fact that none of the high unioneers, from Will Green on down through his executive council, has made a concerted move to kick out the crooks or relieve the oppression of the little people by the union politicians.

In fact, they have a gang man in the executive council itself, the same being George Browne, and nobody in the American Federation of Labor has the character, honesty or courage to look him in the eye and tell him to get the hell out.

Japan's signing of the pact with Germany and Italy is discussed in articles on this page by Dorothy Thompson, Ernest Lindley and Barnet Nover

The Grand Alliance

By Ernest K. Lindley

Signs Of Weakness Betrayed

THE ONLY THING about the signing of the Grand Alliance which was surprising to high officials of our Government was its timing. Even that did not come as a complete surprise, as it had been known for some time that negotiations were being pressed, and for several days that the formal adoption of the pact seemed imminent.

It had been supposed until recently, however, that the Japanese would refrain from a formal public commitment until the British were flat on their back, or at least sagging at the knees. The Germans and Italians are already engaged in a life-and death struggle. The Japanese are not. They could compromise their war with China, or even withdraw from China, and still remain a strong nation. In a war with a major power, however, they would invite the risk of total defeat.

While we can keep our fleet in the Pacific, the Japanese cannot escape the risk of war with a major power. And so long as the British navy controls the Atlantic we can keep our fleet in the Pacific.

Until the outcome of the battle of the Atlantic can be more clearly foreseen, there would be high risks both to Japan and ourselves in becoming engaged in war. If the British fleet continued to hold the Atlantic, the result almost certainly would be the total destruction of Japan as an economic and naval power. The terrible risk to Japan would not be eliminated by the fall of Gibraltar and the British Isles—if the British fleet fell back on the West Coast of Africa and the Western Hemisphere. If the British should lose in the Mediterranean, the risk to Japan might even be increased, for the British fleet in the eastern Mediterranean would then probably retreat through the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean to Singapore.

OBVIOUSLY we are especially eager to avoid war in the Pacific as long as there is a substantial possibility that we may have to defend the Western Hemisphere from a major attack on the Atlantic side before we have won the war in the Pacific.

The phrase "won the war in the Pacific" is used advisedly on high authority. Our experts are confident to the point of certainty that we can inflict a total defeat on Japan—if we do not have to defend ourselves simultaneously in the Atlantic. There is another "if" to this. It is if we can establish our fleet at Singapore before the Japanese take it, or envelop it by occupying the Dutch East Indies.

Our fleet is stronger than Japan's. If based now on Singapore it would be protected by a screen of air, submarine and destroyer bases in the Dutch East Indies, the Philippines and the lower part of Indo-China. Japan would be effectively blockaded, except from the Asiatic mainland, and our destroyers and submarines could harass Japanese communications with China from Shanghai south. With our fleet on the flank or in the rear, the Japanese could not move in force toward the Western Hemisphere. They might send raiding parties, but they could do nothing decisive in that direction. If they sent their battle fleet south it would be at the risk of destruction by our superior navy. Except as a last resort they probably would not take that risk, but instead would engage in a war of naval attrition.

As to the ultimate result our experts would have no doubt, although the time required would be uncertain, and would depend partly on our ability to supply the Chinese army. This, briefly stated, is the way a war with Japan is envisaged in expert quarters—assuming that we were secure in the Atlantic. In the Atlantic we would want to be secure not only from major attack, but from the harassing of supply ships sent to Singapore via the South Atlantic, the Cape of Good Hope and the Indian Ocean—for this would be the shorter and safer route in a war with Japan.

IF SINGAPORE were allowed to fall, or to be encircled so that it could easily be attacked by air and land forces, the difficulty of restraining Japanese expansion would be immensely increased. That is why, if we ever intend to prevent the Japanese from swallowing the vast empire in the South Seas, including Australia and New Zealand, it is important to take our stand while Singapore is still available for our use.

If cold calculations prevail, neither the Japanese nor ourselves will permit any issue to be pushed to the point of war while the fate of the British navy remains in doubt. The penalty to us for guessing wrong would be serious. To the Japanese it would be disastrous.

Given these facts and expert opinions, the prevailing judgment in the upper reaches of the Administration is that the signing of the Grand Alliance at this time betrays signs of weakness. The Axis is two months behind its advertised time-table in Europe, and the Japanese are two years behind theirs in China. All three parties may feel the need of reassuring their own peoples. Neither the Axis nor Japan obtains another gun or another shell from the alliance.

There is no tendency in the Administration to minimize the serious meaning of the Grand Alliance to us if the British navy is sunk or surrendered. On the contrary, among some of the top men there is at least a streak of relief that the situation which they have long foreseen and understood has at last been proclaimed so blatantly that even our most skeptical citizens cannot doubt that it exists.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Fall Consultation

Nurse—How do you feel now, Uncle Sam?

Uncle Sam—For the first time in my long sickness I know it is possible to be better and feel worse at the same time.

Voice—Don't worry; I'll have you up in no time.

Another Voice—It's purely a matter of the right medicine, and I've found it for you.

Voice—You're really in the best shape in years.

Another Voice—You're a sick dog, but I've got the cure.

Uncle Sam—Who are those fellows?

Nurse—Those are the two doctors, Roosevelt and Willkie.

Uncle Sam (desperately)—One is plenty.

Nurse—I know, but which one?

Dr. Roosevelt (beamingly)—Sam, your treatments are turning out fine. I never felt better.

Dr. Willkie—No matter how sick the patient is, you always feel better.

Dr. Roosevelt (to Uncle Sam)—Your pulse is perfect.

Dr. Willkie—Nonsense. That's not Sam's wrist you're holding; it's the nurse's.

Nurse—That's the trouble with you, Wendell; you make no allowance for well-intentioned mistakes!

Dr. Roosevelt—Sam, lemme see your tongue. Fine. There's no coat on it at all.

Dr. Willkie—And if you stay on the case four years more there'll be no pants on it. Look, Sam; what you need is a change of doctors. You've been getting the wrong medicine. You've been experimented with too much.

Uncle Sam—You're telling me!

Dr. Willkie—I'll throw out all these pills, liniments, tonics, restorers, braces, pads and ointments and put you back on a few simple old-fashioned remedies. I'm just a country doctor.

Dr. Roosevelt (sarcastically)—Horse, or man?

Dr. Willkie—If I could treat a patient as long as you have and not do him any more good I'd give up the case.

Dr. Roosevelt—A Roosevelt never gives up anything. I'll write out a new prescription.

Dr. Willkie—That's not a prescription; it's a blank check. A check won't do any good.

Dr. Roosevelt—Nonsense. I depend on 'em almost entirely. Sam, here are some new pills, too.

Uncle Sam—How many do I take?

Dr. Roosevelt—Five billion, three times a day before eating.

Uncle Sam—Five billion!

Dr. Roosevelt—Oh, I beg pardon. My mistake. I'm so used to talking in big figures. Make it one billion!

Dr. Willkie—This man can't take a billion pills three times a day.

Dr. Roosevelt—We're living in a new era.

Uncle Sam—How long must this go on?

Dr. Roosevelt—Only four more years.

Dr. Willkie—Six weeks more and everything will be different.

(There is a terrific battle in the next room, with wild screams and a sound of crashing glass. Two husky internes come out.)

Uncle Sam—Who's the new patient?

Interne—A guy who says his name is John Q. Voter. He's a radio case. Been listening to both sides in the campaign. Gone nuts. Says he can't make sense out of it.

Uncle Sam—Do me a favor, will ya?

Interne—What?

Uncle Sam—PUT ME IN WITH HIM!

Time Bomb

By Barnet Nover

The Berlin Accord

HITLER, Mussolini and the Japanese militarists have rendered an inestimable service to the United States. By their alliance of last Friday they have brought home to the American people as nothing else could the reality of the danger that confronts us.

The agreement is a diplomatic time bomb, a delayed declaration of war against the United States.

The delay is understandable. The signatories happen to have their hands full at the moment. Germany is making no visible progress at winning the Battle of Britain. Italy is bogged down in Egypt. The Japanese find their long-hoped-for victory over China still far beyond the horizon.

The aggressors have no desire to tackle the United States at this time. They know the enormous economic and industrial power which this Nation commands. They realize that if this power were thrown into the scales against them the effect would be fatal to their chances of winning. What they hope is to immobilize the United States so that their immediate enemies will be isolated and broken.

A TIME BOMB has two functions. Although its immediate purpose is destruction, it is also designed to terrorize through the uncertainty of its operation. By the same token, the primary purpose of the Berlin treaty is to terrorize the United States. The end, however, is destruction.

The text of the German-Japanese-Italian alliance bears this out. But it is borne out even more in the inspired comment of the inspired press in Berlin, Rome and Tokyo. No bones are made by the spokesmen of the new axis that the United States is the enemy, not only because of what this country happens to have but because of what we are.

The United States is rich and democratic and thus anathema on two counts. If Great Britain is speedily overwhelmed and China is defeated there would then be nothing to prevent the three powers from using their full political, economic and military force against us. Conversely, this means that only a British victory in Europe and a Chinese victory in Asia would definitely and permanently eliminate that threat. Increased aid to Great Britain and China is thus more than ever an essential aspect of our defense.

THE ALLIANCE concluded at Berlin last Friday is to run for ten years and, according to Article Four is to be implemented at once through the appointment of joint technical commissions. Furthermore, the signatores "agree to cooperate" in furtherance of their respective plans to create a "new order" in Europe and a "new order" in Greater East Asia, whatever that term may mean.

But the most precise commitment embodied in the pact is that requiring the signatories "to assist one another with all political, economic and military means when one of the three contracting powers is attacked by a power at present not involved in the European war or in the Chinese-Japanese conflict."

What does the word "attacked" mean? And what is meant by "involved?" The agreement contains no definitions of these all-important terms. Presumably each signatory can define them as it sees fit. Germany can say she is being "attacked" by the United States if we sent munitions and planes to Great Britain or even if we make the Bund illegal; Japan, for her part, may take the same line with respect to further embargoes on war materials from the United States. Thus, if we took the agreement literally, the only way the United States could possibly avoid charges of hostility to the new Axis bloc would be to submit to the dictation of those three powers.

LIKE THE ROMANS of old the aggressors believe in following the principle of Divide and Rule. When, for instance, Hitler began his quest for a German Lebensraum he had many potential enemies to contend with. He had Austria and Poland and Czechoslovakia, Great Britain and France and even Italy. At every turn, however, he was successful in isolating his intended victim. He is employing these tactics again, this time for gigantic stakes.

There are only two democratic nations left: Great Britain and the United States. British fighting power and the great industrial resources which the United States could, given time, place at Britain's disposal, may prove an unbeatable combination.

In the past Hitler and his henchmen have scoffed at the contributions this country might make to Great Britain. The war, they said, would be over before the American munitions industry and airplane industry got under way. That is the way Mussolini's spokesmen also talked. But the oracles in Berlin and Rome are not so sure now.

The Battle of Britain goes on. Winter is not too far off. By next spring or summer the help which Great Britain could receive from this country may prove decisive. It is such a situation which the Berlin pact is designed to avert. In the meantime the long-range plans embodied in the alliance cannot be ignored. As such the pact is a visible embodiment of the fact that no country and no continent can bound the ambitions of the present-day aggressors. What they want is nothing less than the earth.

Insects Alamode, Fancied by Plants, Found by Hikers

Insect-eating plants which had digested 15 species of insects were found yesterday by 35 members of the Capital Hiking Club in the Suitland, Md., bog.

Skeletons of wasps, bees, horse flies, spiders and house flies were found in the base of pitcher plants growing in the bog, according to Naturalist Robert Shosteck, leader of the group.

The plants, rare in this section, were described as having tubular leaves half filled with acid-like water. The leaves, 2 inches across and from 5 to 10 inches deep, have stiff bristles on the inside to trap insects.

Quarles to Head Winchester Group

Winchester, Sept. 29.—Garland Quarles has been elected president of the Winchester Recreation Association, recently organized to sponsor a community-wide program of recreation and instruction for young people and adults.

In addition to Quarles, officers include Clifford Grim, Donald Weems and Nelson Page, vice presidents; Lee Coble, secretary and Ridgeley White, treasurer.

It is planned to employ a full-time supervisor of recreation in the near future. Wendell Barney was temporary chairman of the organization.

Flow of Foreign Capital Into U. S. Increases Sharply

The Treasury reported yesterday that the flow of foreign capital into this country during the five weeks ended July 3—which included the period when France fell—amounted to $300,903,000.

This was the third greatest influx on record for so short a time, and compared with an inflow of $389,000,000 in April, 1939, and $388,000,000 in September, 1938, when the threat of war was strong in Europe.

The heavy movement increased foreign short-term funds in this country to an unprecedented high of $3,342,819,000. The previous peak was $3,126,539,000 on May 22, 1940.

French funds increased by $185,708,000 to $504,841,000, and British funds rose $43,396,000 to $397,903,000. Other increases included Switzerland, $27,459,000; Canada, $23,171,000, and Sweden, $20,927,000.

The major decreases in balances were: Italy, $35,184,000; Netherlands, $13,583,000; Belgium, $10,705,000, and Norway, $5,105,000.

Net purchases of American securities by foreign owners during the period amounted to $10,487,000.

Tomato Canners Set Record

Princess Anne, Md., Sept. 29 (AP). Canning factories in Somerset County packed 250,000 more cases of tomatoes this season than in any summer in the county's history, operators of the 15 plants estimated after closing for the season last week.

They estimated the total Somerset pack "conservatively" at 880,000 cases of 24 No. 2 cans, each containing an average of 1 pound and 3 ounces of tomatoes.

That means that 20,640,000 cans of tomatoes were packed in this one Eastern Shore county and that approximately 12,800 tons of tomatoes were processed.

Half of College Graduates Get Jobs

Westminster, Md., Sept. 29.—Fifty per cent of the 1940 graduates of Western Maryland College's school of education have obtained teaching positions, Dean Alvey M. Isanogle reported after a survey.

Of the 26 men graduates in the department 10 obtained faculty positions, and 33 of the 65 women graduates obtained jobs as teachers.

1,500 at Cathedral Pray for Britain

Lord Lothian, Aides Attend Service; Dr. Bryan Speaks

A congregation at Washington Cathedral yesterday afternoon knelt in prayer for the people of Great Britain and then stood while the organ thundered "God Save the King."

With Lord Lothian, the British Ambassador, and many members of the Embassy staff in front seats, the congregation of approximately 1,500 heard Dr. John Stewart Bryan, president of William and Mary College and publisher of the Richmond News-Leader, define the challenge to Christianity today.

"When we stand and look at the world, we feel convinced that the opportunity for Christians today means an opportunity to take a stand for the ultimate right," he said. "I don't mean a shallow escape. I mean a stand that calls for all you have and all you're able to give.

Bishop Offers Prayer

At another point in his address he said:

"When airplanes bomb defenseless women and children on roadways, when refugee children are drowned . . . when you see things of that sort, you do one of two things.

"Either you pass by on the other side," he said, "or something rises up in you and says this is a denial of man's strivings, with a feeling that it should not be tolerated."

At the service, which celebrated the thirty-third anniversary of the placing of the foundation stone of the Cathedral, the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, offered a prayer for the people of Great Britain.

"In this hour of their need do Thou strengthen and sustain them," he said. Guard and save them from the violence of their enemies. Give to them the increase of faith, courage and devotion to Thee. Ease their burdens, heal their wounds, calm their fears, give comfort and peace to those who are afflicted and preserve to future generations the gifts and virtues of the British Empire."

Crosses on Exhibition

In another prayer for the "innocent and helpless of all nations," Bishop Freeman asked: "Especially do we pray that Thy love may encompass and safeguard women and little children. Guard their homes and firesides, speedily remove the perils that threaten them and hasten the day of their emancipation and larger happiness."

Bishop Freeman called attention to the fact that churches of various denominations over the Nation were offering prayers yesterday for "our friends and kinsfolk, the people of Great Britain."

After the service, the congregation thronged to the Statesmen's Corner to see the first public exhibition of more than 50 crosses, presented to the Cathedral in 1925 by the late Mrs. James T. Leavitt. Among the priceless items was a crystal reliquary containing a splinter, said to be from the true cross, and a Portuguese silver cross believed to have been given to Christopher Columbus by Queen Isabella.

Child Refugee From England Finds a Friend

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

SHE KNOWS WAR—Four-year-old Eileen Mayes, one of a group of English children who arrived in New York yesterday from Montreal, seems to have found a friend in the Red Cap. An escort said the party had been subjected to bombing 16 times on the train trip to the point of embarkation in England.

British Children, Bombed 16 Times, Arrive in N. Y.

New York, Sept. 29 (AP).—A group of 116 British children who, an escort said, had been subjected to bombing 16 times on the train trip to their port of embarkation in England, arrived in New York tonight.

They came by train from Montreal, where they arrived on Saturday after an 11-day crossing of the Atlantic, which was uneventful except for a false alarm that a submarine had been sighted.

The children, ranging in ages from 5 to 15, will go to foster-homes. The youngest, Kasimir Siegenberg, 5, is headed for Sitka, Alaska.

The children were the first to arrive here since the torpedoing of the City of Benares September 17, resulting in the death of 77 of the 90 British children abroad. The unidentified ship on which the new arrivals sailed departed from England September 18.

War Mothers Show Anxiety At Arlington

Gold Star Delegates Exhibit Fear Other Boys May Die Abroad

Fear that other mothers might have to lose their sons in battle across the seas seemed uppermost in the minds of those Gold Star Mothers who gathered yesterday for their annual observance at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

Reflected in their face as they gazed at the marble tomb, was the memory of that other day when their own sons, like the unknown boy they came to honor, were called to serve their country on a foreign field.

Mrs. E. Pecinich, of Jersey City, was thinking of her son, Corpl. Chester Pecinich, when she breathed a prayer that American mothers would never again have to send their boys to war.

Mrs. Josephine Harz, president of the New Jersey Gold Star Mothers, whose son, John A. Harz, was killed in action, said:

"You know how we feel. We don't want to send our boys overseas again."

Mrs. Mathilda Burling, national president of the Gold Star Mothers, presided at the services, which were held in connection with the President's proclamation setting yesterday aside as "Gold Star Mother's Day."

Wreaths were placed at the tomb by Mrs. Burling, Mrs. Julia Zimmerman, president of the New York State chapter; Mrs. Cecila Hutton, president of the Bronx group; Mrs. Mary Seagriff, president of the 106th Artillery unit of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. Harz, Mrs. Maggie Sheppard, second national vice president; Countess Olga Romanoff and Mrs. Judith Harmel, national judge advocate of the auxiliary of Jewish War Veterans.

The program included music by the Army Band. Brief addresses were given by Vincent Schoeck, national commander, Disabled American Veterans of the World War; Capt. Fred Kochli, national commander, the Army and Navy Legion of Valor; Lieut. Herbert A. Church, national commander, the Military Order of the Purple Heart; A Kojassar, quartermaster, District of Columbia Department of the eVterans of Foreign Wars; Thomas Owen, national historian, American Legion; Dr. Ivy A. Pelzman, national rehabilition officer, the Jewish War Veterans of the United States, and Mrs. Harmel.

Msgr. Sheen Pays Tribute To St. Ignatius

Tribute to St. Ignatius Loyola, founder of the Society of Jesus, was paid yesterday by the Right Rev. Mgr. Fulton J. Sheen at services marking the 400th anniversary of the Jesuit order.

The Catholic University philosophy professor spoke at St. Aloysius' Catholic Church at solemn pontifical mass, celebrated by the Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, D. D., apostolic delegate to the United States, who joined other dignitaries in an opening procession from the rectory to the edifice at North Capitol and I streets.

More than 1,000 worshipers, including many visiting priests, filled the church for the rites conducted by the gold-mitred apostolic delegate from his red-canopied throne flanking the white-clothed, candle-lit altar.

No Hopeless Cases

He knew how to meet error and his life proved that there are no hopeless cases, Mgr. Sheen said of St. Ignatius, whom he compared with "our Blessed Lord, who belonged to no time."

Characterizing St. Ignatius as "one with infinite potentialities for both virtue and vice," and pointing out that he had suffered pain for his vanity and, by a change of will, suffered for the cause of Christ, the speaker said his life proved the possibility of transforming individual lives.

"Man cannot be a patriot in a country where there is no possibility of being a traitor," declared the priest. "No man can be a saint only in a church where there is a possibility to be a demon."

Lesson of Stewardship

Earlier in his address, the speaker said that the saint's life also showed that no man should be given the right to command until he has learned to obey, that he should not be entrusted with wealth until he has learned the lesson of stewardship, and that he cannot save himself if he is to save another.

Other officers of the mass, among the first local celebrations of the Jesuit anniversary, were: The Very Rev. V. Leonard Keelan, S. J., vice provincial of the Southern Region of the Maryland-New York Province of the Society of Jesus, assistant priest; the Very Rev. Nicholas A. Weber, S. M., provincial of the Marists, deacon; the Very Rev. Adrian English, O. P., prior of the Dominican House of Studies, Catholic University, sub deacon; the Right Rev. Msgrs. Edward L. Buckey, pastor of St. Matthew's Cathedral, and Eugene J. Connolly, pastor of St. Peter's Church, deacons of honor of his excellency; the Very Rev. Msgr. Leo. Binz, master of ceremonies, and the Rev. Edward A. Fuller, S. J., assistant master of ceremonies.

The Very Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, S. J., president of Georgetown University, oldest Jesuit and Catholic college in the country, and which last Friday marked the Jesuit anniversary at its convocation, was among the distinguished guests. He is a member of St. Aloysius' Parish.

The choir of Saint Matthew's Cathedral, under the direction of Malton Boyce, sang Yon's "Regina Pacis." The proper of the mass was the authorized Vatican edition of the Gregorian chant. Miss Katherine A. Ruppert, of St. Aloysius, was accompanying organist.

Priests of St. Aloysius' Parish participating were the Rev. Henri J. Weisel, S. J., rector, and Fathers Aloysius E. Fuller, S. J., Joseph J. McLoughlin, S. J., Thomas A. Becker, S. J., and William A. Horigan, S. J., assistants.

Cripple Takes Her Life With Gas

Miss Lillian Nicholas Conner, 28-year-old Government employe and a cripple, died in her gas-filled apartment at 5425 Connecticut avenue northwest, yesterday, leaving two notes, one "to whom it may concern."

"I take the only way out of a helpless situation," the note said, in part. Found on the kitchen floor, with all gas-jets open and window and door cracks stuffed with paper, she was carried outside of the building where firemen attempted for an hour to revive her.

Last rites of the Catholic Church were administered during the attempts, as a large crowd watched. She was a daughter of Mrs. Lilian Dowling, with whom she lived.

Catholic U. Shrine Procurator Named

The Rev. James A. Magner, lecturer and writer, has been appointed procurator of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, it was announced yesterday by the Most Rev. Joseph M. Corrigan, rector of the Catholic University.

The appointment of the Rev. John J. Reilly, of New Haven, Conn., as director of the Shrine was announced at the same time.

Father Magner succeeds the Rev. Joseph N. LaRue, who has been named pastor of the Church of St. Barnabas in Philadelphia. Father Reilly takes the place of the Right Rev. David T. O'Dwyer, Shrine director since 1933, who is now on the West Coast.

Assassin Slain In Puerto Rico

San Juan, Puerto Rico, Sept. 29 (AP).—One man was killed and two injured at Utuado yesterday in an unsuccessful attempt to assassinate Speaker of the House Miguel Angel Garcia Mendez, it was learned today.

Garcia Mendez's bodyguard, retained since he was fired on in 1936, killed the assassin.

Church Teams Visit Homes to Herald Mission

Workers Aim at Better Attendance In Loyalty Drive

"Church Loyalty Sunday," first step in a preparatory stage of the National Christian Mission scheduled here in February, yesterday sent hundreds of church workers ringing doorbells, and stirred pulpit comment. Some congregations combined "Rally Day" and "Loyalty Sunday" programs.

Shortly after church services and dinner, teams of men and women, visitation cards in hand, sat down on porches and in parlors to enjoy Christian fellowship and acquaint friends with the program of the mission, which opened yesterday in 22 metropolitan areas.

Stimulation of church attendance is the main purpose of the loyalty drive, said pastors in sermons, calling attention to the fact that the percentage of the church members regularly attending services in the United States dropped from 32 to 23 in the past 12 years.

Fellowship Dinner

As a prelude to yesterday's visitation, officers and clergy of ten Southeast Protestant churches and six denominations met for a service and fellowship dinner on Saturday night at Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, Fourth and B streets southeast, where the need of the coming mission was stressed by Dr. J. Lowrey Fendrich, host pastor; Dr. W. L. Darby, executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches; Dr. George Bennett, pastor of Wilson Memorial Methodist Church and president of the Southeast Interchurch Council; the Rev. Edward Gabler, pastor of Christ Episcopal Church (Navy Yard) and others.

Forty two-men teams went out to visit from Albright Memorial Evangelical Church, Fourth and Rittenhouse streets northwest where the Rev. George E. Schnabel, pastor, in his morning sermon, called the National Christian Mission the "greatest Christian venture that the church has had up to date," then cited the significance of World Communion Sunday, another Mission phase, next week.

"It will be the first time we have actually thought in terms of a great World Communion Sunday," he said, "when people of every shade of Protestant belief will partake in a great demonstration of our one faith, one hope and one baptism, irrespective of our denominational names."

Flies to Kansas City

Reports on the success of the visitation will be made at an Albright dinner on Wednesday night. Other churches will also report during the week.

Dr. John W. Rustin, pastor of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, and program committee chairman of the local Mission, after last night's services left by air for Kansas City, where he is to address the Mission on Monday through Friday.

E. Stanley Jones, famed missionary to India, who addressed the National Preaching Mission here in 1937, and 30 other prominent speakers will come here from February 2 to 9 for the Mission, of which Dr. Raphael Harwood Miller, pastor of National City Christian Church, is local chairman and National Committee member.

Beauty, Fashion Experts to Attend Store Reception

Leading fashion authorities will attend a reception opening the renovated and enlarged women's apparel store of Frank R. Jelleff, Inc., at 1214 F street northwest today at 8 p. m.

Elizabeth Arden, the beauty specialist; Martha Sleeper, jewelry authority; Bruce, designer of bridal gowns and debutante dresses; and fashion editors of newspapers and magazines are among those expected to be present at the reception which will last until 10 p. m.

Fashion shows, special showings of footwear, and demonstrations of hair dressings to conform with current hat styles, will be held at the store later in the week.

Slav Train Mishap Laid to Sabotage

Zagreb, Yugoslavia, Sept. 29 (AP). A train made up mostly of tank cars en route from Rumania to Germany was derailed during the night between Zagreb and Lubljana in what was believed to be an act of sabotage.

The tracks were damaged so severely that traffic was held up all day. Yugoslav newspapers were forbidden by censors to publish the news.

Ringside Table

By Mary Harris

ROMANY BOOKS SPIEL. Remember Al Spiel who used to smack the drums at Madrillon when Helen Forrest was singing there? Al and Helen married, transferred their talents first to Artie Shaw's band, then to Benny Goodman.

Well, Al has organized his own orchestra, will maestro from the tympani (high class woids, huh?) at the new Romany Room when it opens on October 8. The new Spiel band promises to be one of the finest. Every member plays several instruments, all music will be specially arranged, original novelty lyrics will be featured. Mrs. Al Spiel, alias Helen Forrest, will be prominent in next week's show at the Capitol Theater.

Mimi Kellerman, dancer and niece of the famous Annette Kellerman, who shocked your grandpas with a one-piece bathing suit, will open at the Troika on Wednesday. She's said to be as lovely as her fabulous great-aunt.

EVEN FISH ARE CHARMED. "In this undersea haunt of the King of the Waves, the bluefish are no longer blue, the trout no longer pout, the weakfish have overcome weakness, the crabs aren't crabbed—for they've heard about the melodies of the Paramount Four, who open in the Neptune Room this afternoon." Excerpts from letter from Frank Romer, the Moby Dick of the Neptune Room. Heigh-ho for a deep-sea song!

METRONOME ON AIR WAVES. Grant Thompson's orchestra will start a regular broadcasting program tomorrow night from the Metronome Room, via, NBC hookup . . . Glenn Miller and his orchestra will also go out to Wardman tomorrow eve to present their network program.

THIS WEEK'S BIG PARTIES. Tonight. The Ambassador Hotel's eleventh birthday party. Big doings in both Hi Hat and the Ambassador Room. There'll be Jimmy Summerville's new Four M.'s, with Carmela Lazari, Danny Rangel's Pan-American Four, with Anne Sarret, barytone George Akers, vaudevillians Glendell and Esther and "Flip the Frog." Popular Johnny Chevalier will emcee.

Tuesday. Opening of the enlarged Lounge Riviera. Quantities of this season's debbies and their beaus will be doing the conga with professional smartness to Pete Macia's rhythm. These society youngsters are amazingly good at the new Latin-American dances. Entrancing songs and piano-ing by Harriet Derck.

Friday. The always stupendous "champagne and orchids party" in the Mayflower Lounge. Russell Swan, Park avenue's pet magico, and dancers Loper and Barrat, of musical comedy, will be the visiting stars. Singer Bonnie Boyd will make her debut with Dick Koons' band.

Meyer Davis, the country's king of society music, writes that he plans to present socialark Patricia Prochnik for the first time in Washington at the opening dance of the Friday Evening Supper Club at Sulgrave on October 18.

STRANGE INSTRUMENTS. That enchanting but uncanny horned instrument played by Lawrence Andrini in the Cafe Caprice is a seventeenth century mandolira, originally owned by a Venetian troubadour who, doubtless, played it beneath his lady's window. Lillian Gish played this mandolira in "Ramona." It's a cross between lyre and mandolin, makes magical music. There hadn't been a tuba on a local bandstand since the days of "Yes, We Have No Bananas" until Ben Young's orchestra moved into the Carlton's Cosmos Room lately. This should mean a renaissance of the tuba.

"KEEP IT OVER THERE," new song by George Cohan (who wrote "Over There") will shortly be aired in Washington for the first time by Songstress Eileen George, of the Anchor Room.

ROPE SKIPPING by the "Coconut Grove" houris will be in order at the new Lotus show starting today. New luminaries in the Lotus show include Cordeno and Corinne, who dance and violin simultaneously; acrodancer Betty Lou; Marion Oliver, who tap steps on miniature steps . . . Lotus' "fall opening" will be staged in about two weeks.

The Shoreham's first "fashion luncheon" of the season is due next Saturday with the Post's Marshall Adams describing costume confections.

MORE OPENINGS. Burt's Trans-Lux will have a jolly "fall opening party" on Wednesday. This will also mark the debut of its new "Two Jacks and a Queen," including singer Maxine Moore, guitarist Gwin Hester and pianist-accordionist Bill Jones . . . Remember, it'l Beverly Stull at Mayfair? She may soon be at the Trans-Lux.

El Patio. A brand-new cocktail lounge and restaurant in the location of the Valencia that flourished in prohibition days. Due to open shortly under the sponsorship of Restaurateur Jimmy Flakas.

Maryland Gardens will stage a "mammoth and monumental fall opening" in its Palm Room on October 15, says megaphonist Jim Walter. M. Gardens has "gone to the girls"—girls' band, show girls, girl singers and a girl hostess.

MAYFAIR'S SOFTBALL TEAM and that of the Capitol Theater will play off for the championship of the Night Owl League tomorrow. But Mayfair's putting in a ringer, Charlie Frankhauser, of Glenn Miller's band. May the best team win—if it's Mayfair.

MUSIC WITH A LIFTO. The thrilling version of "Song of Love" from "Blossom Time" being offered by Lynn Allison and Russ Cullen in the Pall Mall Room . . . The lulling touch given to "Sleepy Time Gal" by that barytone lark, Ralph Cannon, of Milton Davis' Rainbow Room orchestra . . . The subdued torchiness of "I'm Stepping Out With a Memory Tonight" when sung by maestro Al Oddone, of the Gay Nineties.

Gossip. It's said that Arthur Todd, of the King Cole Room, has a choice of four spots for the new 13-piece band he's assembled. He leaves K. C. R. on November 1 . . . Madame Rumor vows that Ray Nelson, singer-bassist at the Casino Royal, will soon wed a lass he met when he played at Burt's Trans-Lux.

Dinner Suit's the Thing For Parties This Fall

The most timeless of all dinner suits is shown below, worn by Miss Rose Batterstone. It consists of a black wool jacket with sequin revers over a wool dress, topped with jet sequins. For first nights and dinner dancing.

Alice Dowd, attractive style coordinator from New York, in town for the festivities surrounding a local store's formal opening, poses above in a striking dinner suit of black mossy crepe with top of green gold suede. The original design by Karen Stark, American designer.

Alice Dowd, New York Fashion Authority, Predicts Its Popularity; Much Jewelry, Real or Paste, Smart for Evening Wear

THE BLACK TIE season is in and with it comes the demand for the chic little dinner dress—the most indispensable item in any fashionable woman's wardrobe. With current theatrical first nights and the commencement of bright, casual, dinner or supper parties about town, the need for personable, elegantly simple dinner costumes has become the "must" of the moment on shopping calendars.

MARSHALL ADAMS

A woman who has identified herself with not only original dinner and theater clothes, but with fashion coordination of all sorts, is Alice Dowd, fashion expert from New York who is in town for the week to help celebrate the official opening of one of Washington's popular stores. Joining a throng of such celebrities as Elizabeth Arden, Mary Lewis, Grand Duchess Marie and Martha Sleeper, Mrs. Dowd gave us a preview of what New York is wearing in the way of after-dark clothes and how we can profit thereby.

Strapless, Bareback Gown Fall Surprise

Recent openings such as El Morocco's showed one surprise fashion, the strapless and bare-backed evening gown. According to Mrs. Dowd, even the experts were amazed, since there has been talk of nothing but high, tight, long dinner sheaths for the past month in fashion circles. However, although the decolette supper-club clothes were more noticeable, they were in the minority in contrast to the simple, elegant little dinner suits worn by seven-tenths of the women.

The return of the dinner suit, set forth originally by Schiaparelli, seems pretty certain, Mrs. Dowd feels, since it fills the function for both black and "dress" affairs this winter, yet is not too flippant a mode in the face of international conditions. It is even more interesting now than it was ten years ago, when it timidly appeared with embroidery or quilted trimmings. Now the dinner suit will go to Washington parties in all black wool with jet or colored sequins, in richly colored crepe with wool or diamante embroidered revers, or in pastel broadcloth, most momentous new trend in this jacket and dinner skirt or gown combination. Even the matron, wearied of her apathetic old black velvet dinner dress, finds comfort in this fall's dinner suit—comprising a crepe sheath with bright wool bolero which kindly conceals lost youth lines.

According to Mrs. Dowd, every important New York opening has been ablaze with jewels, both real and paste. She even tells an amusing tale on one of Manhattan's current glamour girls who lost a diamond bracelet during the shuffle of an "opening," only to return later to find that three similar bracelets had also been lost and unclaimed. Women of high fashion are wearing "good" and junk jewels up to their elbows, a trick which Washington women might do well to emulate.

Lovely Costumes Cover Multitude of Sins

According to Mrs. Dowd, nothing makes a woman feel more sparkling than costume jewels and flowers at gala night affairs. There are not enough cotume accents worn here with dinner clothes, she thinks, a fact which often causes such garb to seem unfinished in effect. As for flowers, a gardenia for lapel, muff or hair, or an autumn corsage for one of the new low-waisted dinner gowns, does wonders for the wearer's morale.

Mrs. Dowd feels strongly on the point, too, that many mature women, both here and in most communities, don't keep pace with the heads of the family in dressing for theater, dinner parties, etc. They too often let down the bars because of lost curves or "oomph" by succumbing to mandarin house coats over chiffon dance frocks, black velvet and bunny wraps over brown lace, and coiffures completely out of date and tempo with their gowns.

Also, the woman of wealth and position often feels that these two assets are sufficient to permit her to wear the same "old rags" year after year even though their silhouette, color or character are hopelessly dated. Not only is this attitude bad style, but actually bad taste, Mrs. Dowd feels, since this disregard does not flatter either one's host or the occasion.

Make New Fall Slip Covers

SLIP COVERS are so smart these days. Admiring them in friends' homes, in shops, you realize what magic one would work for your old sofa, making it look like new. But you may think, the cost of a custom-made fit . . .!

The smartest slip cover you've seen you could make yourself. And working the pin-on way, using your sofa or chair as pattern, you're bound to get a trim fit.

As for materials, many lovely ones are inexpensive. For a formal effect, choose a rayon-cotton in burgundy with a champagne figure; for an informal effect a heavy novelty cotton in rich blue.

To make your sofa cover, just remove the cushions and smooth the fabric down inside-back and over seat, a width to each section.

Easily you cover a chair, too, with the instructions and diagrams in our 40-page booklet, "Making Slip Covers Successfully." Shows how to cover chairs and sofas of all kinds the pin-on way; gives every step from estimating materials to finishing seams. Has decorator's tips on styles, fabrics, trimmings.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "Making Slip Covers Successfully," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

Vacation Inventory

THE IN-LAWS:

"Ye-es we had a very nice vacation . . . Oh, we went to see George's people . . . Yes we felt we really should, though of course it was hard with the children and everything. You know how older people are, and then George's mother is the kind that's always so particular about everything. Not that she isn't a very lovely woman but—well, you know if it's your own folks it's a lot different.

"Then his sister wts there with her children—the little boy's terribly spoiled and he and Junior—well he's just George's father all over again. And then George's brother and his wife came down for the week-end . . . Yes, thrt did make it nice, only their little girl is just the age of Sister—and she's just like her mother. Not that I'm not fond of Rose, she's perfectly darling, but she's just a little odd. Say, you know that new hand-blocked print dress I got that everybody raved so much about? . . . Well she never even mentioned it! And she didn't say a word about my new wrist watch George gave me for my birthday.

"Oh, it's not that George's people aren't perfectly lovely, understand, and they have this wonderful background and all, and they're very wonderful to me, and we felt we really ought to go see them this summer so that next year we could go some place we really wanted—that is, take some kind of a real trip."

THE OLD HOME TOWN

"Yes, I went back home . . . Oh, about the same . . . No, nothing's changed at all except for the new auditorium . . . and the airfield . . . and several new office buildings and then, of course, there's a lot of new residential sections—oh, yes, and they have a new hotel with a very nice cocktail bar. All modernistic.

"Yes, I saw everybody . . . Oh, just dragging along in the same old ruts . . . Sally Minch? . . . Yes, she's still at the bank. She's assistant cashier now. I don't suppose she'll ever leave . . . Molly March? . . . Oh, she's been married and divorced . . . Dorothy Goode? . . . Oh, about the same. You knew she was married and had twins, didn't you? I don't suppose she'll ever get out of there now.

"Bud Spry? . . Oh, say, he's virtually a millionaire! Yes, he makes those puppy flower pots. They say his wife has a coat that cost $2,900. And to think that I used to—honestly, girls have no sense.

"Oh, and Ted Rohrer's running for Congress! Can you imagine that? . . . And to think I might have—oh, YES, we used to go together . . . Well, not very much, of course. But I know one thing—I could have had him if I'd wanted him.

"Yes, I enjoyed seeing everybody again, but it was a little depressing. Everything just the same. And I just felt so far away from things that were really happening."

THE GREAT OUTDOORS

"Yes, it was the first time I'd ever seen the Rockies . . . Oh, yes, I loved them. There was such a wonderful bunch of people at the lodge where we stayed. There was one couple in particular from St. Louis—he's very prominent in the Persimmon Growers Association and she's from a very wonderful old family in Memphis—well, we went around with them a lot, and then there was a couple from Chicago—he's head of a big paper doily concern—and then there was a very lovely widow from Detroit—they say her income is so big she couldn't spend it if she wanted to!

"Yes, we saw everything—oh, say, at Long's Park we met a banker and his wife from Buffalo who knew the Jinks. Yes. And at Colorado Springs it was simply amazing how many people we ran on to that we knew—the Joe Putters and Mrs. Flitt and her daughter . . . and some people that knew the Quincebys here.

"Yes, the mountains are very lovely. We took a wonderful trip through the Garden of the Gods with a doctor and his wife from Birmingham, and then we went up Pikes Peak with a woman whose husband is distantly related to the Duchess of Windsor. Oh, for anyone who's never seen the Rockies it was terribly educational, and say—on our way back, guess who we met in Chicago!"

Beauty Secrets

By CAROLYN ABBOTT.

How to Cleanse the Face

THERE'S an art to cleansing the face properly. The muscles of the face are so delicate they are easily broken down with harsh massage. Use the fore and middle fingers to massage upward in a circular movement. This is the advice of Mme. Colbo, beauty expert of a well-known cosmetic manufacturer who was in Washington recently.

"Seldom is the skin immaculate after a single cleansing," she explained. "Usually, I recommend several cream massages and a soap and water scrubbing. The first application dissolves your make-up, the second and third remove all traces of soil and soften the skin. For your soap and water scrub, use a mild soap and a soft wash cloth."

If you want to lighten your skin, mix a drop of lemon juice with a little of your cleansing cream just before you apply it to the face. Remove the cream with a piece of cotton saturated with rose water and glycerine. The rose water and glycerine counteract the drying effect of the lemon, according to Mme. Colbo.

There are three types of cleansing creams put out by a reputable cosmetic firm, which are on special sale for half price at one of the local stores.

Paris Fashions Turning Back To Romantic Age

Paris (AP).—Fashions are turning back a century to revive the romantic charm of fichu draped bodices, padded hips and rustling skirts.

Decollette evening dresses displayed in Robert Piguet's winter collection dated back to 1840.

The Piguet models were padded slightly in the hips under puffed-out skirts which touched the ground. They were balanced at the shoulders in short sleeves.

Long dinner dresses in crepes, satins, nets or wool jersey were brightened up with lines of gold or jet paillettes.

These dresses featured covered-up necks and long, tight sleeves with flat, seamless shoulders in kimono style.

Cocktail dresses were shown in black crepes and velvets in short lengths. Some had full shirred skirts and striking bodice embroideries of gold paillette flowers or leaves.

Your Figure, Madame!

—By Ida Jean Kain

By Ida Jean Kain

IT SEEMS as though avoirdupois doesn't carry any weight with the judiciary—a man can't divorce his wife simply because she weighs 100 pounds or so above her legal limit!

At least, that was the decision handed down recently in a case in which the plaintiff testified that the wife's weight had increased from 140 pounds to 256 in their 14 years of marriage. That's an average of only eight pounds a year—but the husband thought it added up to 116 pounds too much.

The court noted, however, that the husband has the reputation of being an excellent amateur cook, and took the view that he might have been guilty of culinary collusion—the superabundance of good cookery he provided was certainly no help to his wife in keeping her weight down. And the divorce was denied.

In all fairness, we think the man is entitled to his freedom. After all, he did the cooking, and she did the overeating. Why couldn't she use a little restraint?

But this case is so exceptional that it isn't likely to establish a precedent. For one thing, it's the little woman usually who is famed for her good cooking. She gets to be a famous cook because she prepares—and samples—the dishes her husband particularly likes. If she loses her figure, it's partly because she does a little too much sampling.

The homemaker deserves leniency in the matter of weight. It is very difficult to be around good food most the time and not take too much of it. It is no snap to plan tempting menus, do the marketing, cook, clear off the table—and stick to a diet.

Another thing that makes it hard for the homemaker to keep her perspective about food is the average man's chivalry—or cowardice—on the subject of weight. The man who took his wife's aveirdupois to the divorce court is the only husband we have ever heard of who didn't try to sidestep the issue. Ask a man about the feminine vogue for slimness, and what does he say? Well, he puts a placating expression on his face, and avers that he likes "women to have a little weight," and that he thinks his wife is perfect "just as she is!"

A woman has to use her intuition to discover a man's real likes and dislikes, and the smart homemaker works her intuition overtime. In addition, she is becoming more expert every year in giving her family the foods that contribute to high vitality. She is doing a swell job of keeping her own figure and is even managing to help the head of the house to keep his weight down.

But back to the case in point—after weighing the evidence, we'd suggest that the best way for this wife to keep her husband would be to get her figure back!

'Country Parties' Lure Top-Flight Society

Cotters Give Party for Their Daughter; Lyons Invite 1,000 Guests to Spacious Estate At Party Honoring World War Order

TOPFLIGHT SOCIETY took to the road yesterday with a double purpose—to enjoy the Indian summer and attend "country parties." Droves of cars whizzed out the Rockville pike, bound for the Joseph Cotters' farm or that of Dr. and Mrs. James Alexander Lyon. Still another group headed for Virginia, Warrenton in particular, where Mrs. Celeste Crosby Miller entertained at a luncheon.

Informality reigned at Jolea where Mr. and Mrs. Cotter gave a party in honor of their daughter, Madeline, who will be married on Thursday to John Lewis Smith, jr. The rambling house was filled to overflowing with autumn blooms.

Four Sisters Assist at Party

Vying with the flowers were the four pretty Cotter girls. Madge, as the bride-to-be is more familiarly called, had chosen a gray crepe frock, effectively draped. Margaret, who has been ill for some time, made her debut yesterday afternoon. She was constantly surrounded by a group of well-wishers, who hope to see her ride Rocksie, her famous horse, in the very near future. Clair and Dorothy Cotter dashed here and there to see that no one was neglected. Mrs. Cotter had selected a teal blue suit. Assisting her was Mrs. Irene Caldwell.

Although cocktails were in order there was tea for those who wanted it. The recreation room had been cleared out and the wedding gifts set up in a resplendent array.

This afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fleming will give a cocktail party for the couple. Bob Fleming, jr., will be best man.

Tomorrow afternoon the ushers will give a cocktail party at the home of Clarence Dodge. Hosts at the affair will also include Kent Legg, Malvern Morse and John Hamilton. Dr. and Mrs. Robert Coffey, jr., will give a dinner party on Wednesday evening following the researsal.

Lyons Invite 1,000 Guests

While the Cotter party was in sway another gathering was in progress at Glenview Farm, the home of Dr. and Mrs. Lyon.

At least 1,000 guests roamed over the spacious estate between the hours of 5 and 7 o'clock. The reception was given for members of the Military Order of the World War, established 20 years ago. Assisting Mrs. Lyon were the ladies of the reception committee. The invitations were sent out by "Major" and Mrs. Lyon—for Dr. Lyon holds a commission.

Undaunted by the fact she is planning to move in town tomorrow, Mrs. Lyon directed the party as easily as if she were having tea for two. For the first time in many years the Lyons are planning a "city winter." They have leased a home at 1830 Twenty-fourth street. Young Elizabeth Lyon has gone off to the Westover School, in Middlebury, Conn.

Viewtree, the Warrenton home of Mrs. Celeste Crosby Miller, was the background for a congenial party yesterday afternoon. Among those who motored down for the luncheon were Mr. and Mrs. Jouett Shouse and the latter's father, Edward A. Filene, of Boston; the Naval Attache of the French Embassy and Mme. Benech and Count and Countess Gramont.

Newlywed Kluckhuhns To Live in D.C.

Bride Was Former Priscilla Pratt; Couple Visits New York

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Henry Kluckhuhn journed to New York following their marriage here on Friday. Upon their return they will live at 3009 South Dakota avenue.

The bride is the former Miss Priscilla Evelyn Pratt, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Daniel Harry Pratt. Mr. Kluckhuhn is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kluckhuhn, of Laurel, Md. The ceremony took place at the Army-Navy Country Club with the Rev. Edwin J. Lee, officiating. The couple took their vows before an improvised altar in the north room of the club banked with ferns and flowers.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white satin gown, simply cut, with a long train. Her veil was caught with orange blossoms in a coronet. She carried her grandmother's wedding handkerchief. Her bouquet was of orchids, gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Howard J. Simons, sister of the bride, wore a golden brown silk jersey frock. She carried a large arm bouquet of rust chrysanthemums.

Miss Helen Kientz, a bridesmaid, wore a frock of blue satin and carried yellow chrysanthemums. Another bridesmaid, Miss Marion Reynolds, wore India Spice and carried matching chrysanthemums while Miss Alice Thompson wore a sage green satin gown with rust mums. Miss Diane Pratt, sister of the bride, served as junior bridesmaid. She wore a peach taffeta frock and carried golden chrysanthemums.

Robert Kluckhuhn served as best man for his brother. Ushers were William Maynard, and Arnold Korab. A reception followed the ceremony. Mrs. Pratt wore a soldier blue crepe frock with a matching turban and a corsage of roses. Mrs. Kluckhuhn had chosen a maroon velvet gown with a matching hat and a cluster of roses.

Among the out of town guests at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. William Maynard, of Baltimore, Md., and Frank Glueck, of Philadelphia, Pa.

Occupied With Red Cross Work

Mrs. William Evans, jr., who since her return from Canada has been busy with Red Cross work. Originally a New Zealander, Mrs. Evans has become a popular member of society. She is looking forward to a snowy winter, for she loves to ski. She has two youngsters, William, jr., and Eleanor Woods to Live In Easton, Pa.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Raymond Wood, jr., are motoring through the Blue Ridge Mountains and upon their return will reside in Easton, Pa. The marriage of the former Miss Hilda Gibbs Cato, daughter of Mrs. Dyke Cullum, of Silver Spring, Md., took place on Thursday in the Trinity Episcopal Church in Easton. The Rev. Frederick O. Musser officiated at the 6 o'clock ceremony. Mr. Wood is the son of Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Wood, of Easton.

Dyke Cullum gave the bride in marriage. She wore a gown of ivory satin and tulle trimmed with irridescent sequins and a tulle veil. She carried Easter lilies and valley lilies.

Serving as maid of honor Miss Jane Wiggins, of Detroit, wore a blue net gown with a full skirt and long, shirred sleeves and a round neckline. Her bonnet was of matching net and she carried a cascade bouquet of Briarcliff roses and rubrum lilies.

The remaining attendants were Miss Doris Baker, of Elmira, N. Y.; Miss Mary Emerson, of Alexandria, Va.; Miss Alice McCluskey and Miss Betty Chipman, of Easton. Their gowns were made like that of the maid of honor, the first two in periwinkle blue and the others in lighter shades. They all carried bouquets of roses.

Russell Stewart Wood was best man for his brother and ushers were Bud Kelly, of Bethlehem, Pa.; Frank Beacham, Charles Chipman and Frank Ricker, all of Easton.

A reception followed the wedding at the home of the bridegroom's parents. Mrs. Cato wore a beige net gown over green crepe. Mrs. Wood had chosen a brown crepe ensemble trimmed in sequins.

The bride attended National Park College in Washington and is a member of Chi Omicron Pi Sorority. The bridegroom attended Blair Prep School and Lehigh University. He is a member of Beta Theta Phi Fraternity.

Last Supper Party Held at Holly Hill

Holly Hill, the summer estate of Dr. and Mrs. Alba M. Edwards of Washington, on Riggs road, near Silver Spring, was the scene of the last of a series of supper parties, last night.

The guests included a large number of the younger set of the Census Bureau, where Dr. Edwards is chief of the Occupations Department.

In the glow of a large bonfire the guests sang and played games, after which a buffet supper was served in the quaint dining room. Carrying out a custom of many years, each guest was presented with a bouquet of cut dahlias.

Dr. and Mrs. Edwards will close their home in a few weeks to take up their residence at 2522 Twelfth street northwest.

Mrs. Butler Will Be Guest at Luncheon

Mrs. Hugh Butler will be the guest of honor at the luncheon following Mrs. Georgette Ross Howard's first current topics lecture at 2400 Sixteenth street on Friday.

Mrs. Butler will lead the discussion on the question, "What role should the United States play in the world today?"

Mrs. Frances Lindsay, on From Florida, Feted by Friends in District and Virginia

MRS. FRANCES ALLEN LINDSAY, of Miami Beach, Fla., arrived in Virginia on Saturday and is visiting near Leesburg, after a short stay in Washington where she has many friends.

Mrs. Lindsay attended the dinner party given on Saturday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Southgate Morison at their home, Redgate, in honor of their houseguest, Arthur Hayden, of this city. Also attending the dinner party was George C. Carter. Mrs. Lindsay lived in Virginia for two years at Greenway in Leesburg.

Mrs. Alexander Gordon entertained at a luncheon a few days ago at her home in Rappahannock County, in honor of her house guest and sister-in-law, the Duchess de Crussol, of Paris, who has recently arrived in this country with her young son the Duke de Crussol. Among Mrs. Gordon's guests were Mrs. Richard E. Byrd, of Winchester; Mrs. Thomas Bolling Byrd, of Boyce; Mrs. Henry Fairfax, of Middleburg; Mrs. Henry T. Oxnard, of Upperville; Mrs. A. C. Carson, Mrs. William Downing, Mrs. Millar Waller and Mrs. Slaughter, all of Front Royal; Miss Elizabeth Gordon and Mrs. George Barnett, of Wakefield, near Front Royal.

MRS. THOMAS RANDOLPH KEITH, of Fairfax, entertained at a luncheon in her apartment on California street, Washington, the other day for ladies of Fairfax County knitting for "Bundles for Britain." After a delicious meal Mrs. Charles Poser, chairman, distributed new wool and they spent several hours chatting and knitting. Among the guests were Mrs. John S. Barbour, Mrs. William Earle, Mrs. Frederic D. Richardson, Mrs. Rathbone Smith, Mrs. Robert Graham, Mrs. Charles P. Howze, Mrs. Peters, Mrs. Cooke, Miss Carter Conrad and Miss Augusta Conrad.

Mrs. Poser, chairman, told of arranging weekly meetings and of how they raise money for the cause. "A luncheon is given by some one in Fairfax County each week and those attending pay a fee which is used to buy wool." She says they have a good crowd, a good time and it is a popular and easy way to raise money to buy wool.

Mrs. Edward N. de Russy, of Washington, was a visitor to the hunt country the past week. Mr. and Mrs. de Russy are leaving next week for the West Coast, by motor, where Mr. de Russy has business to attend to. Mr. and Mrs. de Russy were married in Washinton two years ago at The Lindens, the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Maurice Morris, on Kalorama road, which was moved there from Massachusetts, brick by brick, stone by stone and plank by plank. Mr. de Russy is a cousin of Mr. Morris and Mrs. de Russy is a cousin of Mrs. Morris.

MRS. WILLIAM H. CLIFFORD will entertain members of the Fauquier and Loudoun Garden Club, on Wednesday afternoon at her home Chudleigh, near Oatlands. Guests will arrive at 3 o'clock and after a business meeting—"gardens' best flowers," will be exhibited. Everyone will be interested in knowing what the "mystery program" arranged by Mrs. Southgate Morison for the meeting will be. She has asked Mme. George Boncescu, of Washington, wife of the Financial Advisor to the Rumanian Legation, to come to Virginia. Mme. Boncescu will give a talk on "Gardens in Rumania," on Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Thomas Bolling Byrd and her son Billy Mitchell, jr., have joined Mr. Byrd at their home Kentmere, in Clarke County, after spending the summer in Maine. Mrs. Byrd's daughter, Miss Lucy Mitchell, is visiting Miss Marjorie Daniels, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Robert Daniels, at Brandon, on the James River. Miss Mitchell and Miss Daniels, will arrive in Middleburg this week to reenter Foxcroft School.

Peruvian Envoy To Play Host

The Peruvian Ambassador, Don Manuel de Freyre Y Santander, will be host at luncheon today in honor of Col. Felipe de la Barra and Lieut.-Col. Hosea M. Tomayo who are scheduled to arrive this morning from Peru.

The Peruvians will join the officers of the armies of eight other Latin-American countries for an inspection tour of Army posts in this country.

Gen. George C. Marshall invited representatives of this hemisphere to take part in the tour under the auspices of the Government.

Callahans to Live On Allison Street

Following their wedding trip in New York, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Callahan will live at 403 Allison street. The bride is the former Miss Catherine Delores Hanley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hanley. The ceremony took place last Wednesday in St. Stephen's Catholic Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. McCarthy attended the couple. The bride wore a sapphire blue velvet frock with a small velvet hat to match and carried pale pink roses. Mrs. McCarthy's gown was of wine velvet and she carried pale yellow roses.

Cissels on Wedding Trip, Bride Former Elizabeth Schaeffer

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Jones Cissel, jr., are on a wedding trip following their marriage on September 14. The bride is the former Miss Elizabeth C. Shaeffer, daughter of Mrs. William L. Schaeffer, of Seneca, Md. Mr. Cissel is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert J. Cissel, of Darnestown, Md. The Rev. William I. Campbell officiated at the 8 o'clock ceremony in the Darnestown Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Sterling Bowman served as organist and Mrs. Lorraine Milliken rendered several solos.

Given in marriage by her brother, William Schaeffer, the bride wore a white satin gown, with a sweetheart neckline of lace, and a train. Her finger-tip veil was of embroidered tulle and held by a Mary Queen of Scots headdress. She carried a shower bouquet of roses.

Miss Mary Jane Moore served as maid of honor. She wore an old-fashioned dress of rose taffeta with a matching taffeta hat. Her nosegay was of assorted flowers. Miss Fannie Allnutt, of Silver Spring, Md., was bridesmaid as were Miss Helen White, of Poolesville; Miss Doris Davenport, of Baltimore, and Miss Marie Crawford, of Middlebank, Md. They all wore colonial frocks of blue taffeta with matching hats. They carried nosegays.

Howard Cissel served as best man for his brother. Ushers were Charles Lyddane, Humphrey Cissel, William Mills and Boyd Waters.

There was a reception following the ceremony at the home of the bride's mother. Mrs. Schaeffer wore a deep velvet frock with a corsage of talisman roses. Mrs. Cissel had chosen a light blue chiffon frock with a corsage of yellow roses.

Helen Collins, Bride, Elect, Feted

Miss Helen Collins, whose marriage to Millard West will take place in St. Gabriel's Church on Saturday, was the guest of honor at a shower given at the home of Miss Kathryn Greveling on Underwood street, last Wednesday evening. A buffet supper was served.

The guests included Mrs. Harry Bachman, Miss Rose Barnes, Miss Mary Barron, Mrs. Theodore Bogley, Mrs. Harry Burns, Mrs. John Collins, Miss Mary Collins, Miss Mary Creveling, Mrs. Elliott Dimond, Mrs. James Dimond, Miss Dorothy Dyer, Mrs. James Earley, Miss Mary Farrington, Miss Lidwin Genau, Miss Katie Higgins, Mrs. Harry Kane, Miss Mary Kirby, Miss Margaret McDermott, Mrs. Daniel McMahon, Miss Catherine McMahon, Mrs. Edward Nohe, Miss Marie Nohe, Miss Helene O'Connor, Miss Cecelia O'Leary, Miss Helen Riordan, Mrs. William Roche, Miss Agatha Shea, Mrs. William Shea and Mrs. Herbert Warner.

Miss Collins was graduated from the Academy of Notre Dame de Namur of this city and is a member of the District Bar Association, having received her degree in law from Columbus University.

Mrs. Chatfield-Taylor Announces Troth Of Daughter, Rose, to Frank MacMurray

A GAY occasion was the luncheon given yesterday by Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor to announce the engagement of her second daughter, Rose, to Frank MacMurray, son of the United States Ambassador to Turkey and Mrs. John van Antwerp MacMurray. Rose, looking almost too beautiful, wore a simple velveteen frock of a blue that matched her eyes, and was very busy helping her mother receive the guests. Young Hobey Chatfield-Taylor was acting as host in place of his father.

Wayne Chatfield-Taylor will probably be arriving from Europe on the Clipper today after a year of work for the Red Cross in all of the worst devastated parts of the war-torn countries. He was expected in time for yesterday's fete but bad weather held up his plane at Horta, and it was decided not to postpone things but to take the big events in the family one at a time.

Frank MacMurray's pretty, dark-haired sister was on hand to represent his family, having come in from Madeira School, where she is a student, and numerous cousins and friends of both Rose and Frank added their congratulations.

Luncheon was served in the garden at small tables and the weather was perfect. The only speech made was a short one by young Brooke Lee who said all of the nicest things in the most interesting way I have ever heard.

AMONG THOSE OFFERING their affectionate congratulations to Rose and Frank were Gen. and Mrs. Sherman Miles, Mrs. Nathan Wyeth, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Houghteling, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Wilmer, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Feis, Mrs. Charles Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Page, and Mrs. Alan Kirk whose husband is Naval Attache at the U. S. Embassy in London. Also Howland Shaw, Clarence "Buzzie" Hewes, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Beall Gwynn, Ernest Draper of the Federal Reserve Board, charming post-deb Jane Acheson, John Oakes, Tom Claggett and a number of others.

Buzzie Hewes had some good news for the younger set when he told us that his niece, Ellen Floweree, will come to Washington to pay him a visit about the middle of November. Meantime she is taking a secretarial course in New Orleans. Buzzie himself is off for a short stay in Hot Springs. He will then go to New Orleans and return to Washington November 1 to open the house in preparation for Ellen's arrival.

It is nice to know that the David Williamsons are to be in and around Washington this winter. Mrs. Williamson and the children will probably spend most of the time on their farm in Maryland with Dave journeying there for week-ends. The head of the house has taken a small apartment in town for the working part of the week and the Williamsons' friends are looking forward to having the charming Rachel join him from time to time.

THE SNOWDEN FAHNESTOCKS blew into the Capital over the week-end and, to the great disappointment of their friends, blew right out again. Bea Fahnestock, one of Washington's most popular hostesses, has gone to Hot Springs for a fortnight to recover from one of those late summer colds which we all know too well, and Snowden has returned to Newport and New York on business. However, they promis to return and settle down eventually.

Mrs. Cordell Hull To Christen Ship At Newport News

Invitations have been issued for the launching of the S. S. President Hayes at Newport News, Va., on Friday at 11:30 o'clock and the buffet luncheon which is to follow at the James River Country Club.

Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, will christen the ship. She will be accompanied by her niece, Mrs. Paul Hays, of Staunton, Va. and Miss Edith Wright, daughter of Mrs. J. Butler Wright and the late United States Ambassador to Cuba. Mrs. Hays will come to Washington the middle of the week to go with Mrs. Hull and will probably remain over the week-end with the Secretary and his wife at the Carlton.

John Ellis to Wed Miss Engelbach

Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Arthur Engelbach announce the engagement of their daughter, Margaret Elizabeth, to Mr. John Flather Ellis, son of Maj. and Mrs. Harry Van Horn Ellis, of Boston.

Miss Engelbach and Mr. Ellis attended George Washington University. Miss Engelbach is a member of Alpha Delta Pi Sorority and Mr. Ellis is a member of Phi Sigma Kappa.

Mary Crozier To Be Wed

Mrs. Taney Ward Crozier, of Athens, W. Va., announces the engagement of her daughter, Mary Josephine Crozier, to Francis Ray Power, of Martinsburg, W. Va. Miss Crozier is the daughter of the late Taney Ward Crozier. Mr. Power is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. J. T. Power, of Martinsburg.

Miss Crozier attended the public schools in Matoaka and Morgantown and was graduated from Concord State Teachers' College with a Bachelor of Arts degree. The prospective bride is a member of Sigma Sigma Sigma, national education sorority, and Gamma Phi Omicron, journalism fraternity.

She is now employed in the Adjutant General's Department in Charleston. Miss Crozier is a niece of Ernest L. Bailey, former State road commissioner and now State director of the office of Federal Records and Reports.

Mr. Power is a native of eastern West Virginia. He is a graduate of Shepherd College, West Virginia University and Columbia University. He is a member of Tau Kappa Epsilon, national social fraternity, Kappa Delta Pi, national honorary educational fraternity, Phi Beta Kappa, national honorary scholastic fraternity, the Scottish Rite of Free Masonry, the Beni Kedem Shrine, University Club and Rotary Club. The gridegroom-elect has held a number of positions in the educational system of West Virginia and is now assistant State superintendent of free schools.

Girl Is Informed That Her Favorite Beau Has Said He Likes Her Younger Sister Best; She Worries

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been going with a boy for over a year. Everyone tells me that he likes me very much, and judging by his actions, I am sure he does. I know his parents quite well, and they, too, seem to like me. However, one day he was talking to my cousin (whom I trust) and he remarked that he didn't care as much for me as he does for my younger sister.

My cousin told him to tell me that; but he refused. He said he was sure I liked him. So then my cousin came to me and advised me to watch him, which I am now doing. My sister doesn't care anything for him, as he well knows. But still, he doesn't show her any affection at all. He pays all his attention to me and has asked me for dates. I like him very much, but I am afraid to show it.

This is my problem: Should I tell him what I know, or wait? Do you think he really cares for me and didn't want my cousin to know the truth? Or does he prefer my sister? Thanking you for any advice, and wishing you the best of luck, I am, ROSALIE S.

Outwit Talebearer; Get Boy's Version

DEAR ROSALIE S.: If your cousin is a girl, then I advise you to be on guard against "a jealous woman." She may want the boy's attention herself, and she might be prying and tattling in an effort to create bad feeling between you and him. If the cousin is a boy, we can give him the benefit of the doubt. It isn't likely he would have any axe to grind, one way or the other. But, in that case, it's perfectly possible your beau, in a flush of embarrassment, told an untruth in order to conceal his real feelings from curious or laughing eyes.

However, regardless of the motives which inspired the report, if it's bothering you greatly, the sensible thing to do is get it out of your system in open discussion. Let's assume the boy's name is John. And that your younger sister's name is Jill. The next time you have an opportunity for casual, leisurely conversation with John, just say to him: "John, I want to ask you a question. And I want you to be perfectly truthful with me. Do you like Jill better than me? Susie (or Billie) says you do. She (or he) told me you said so. Is that true?"

Then, whether John stammers "yes" or "no," you can proceed to explain that it doesn't really make any difference in your friendship; that you just wanted to know where you stood; and you don't like other people having to tell you things you should have sense enough to see for yourself. If he admits he does like Jill better, and you are sympathetic about her not caring especially for him, you may capture his interest as never before. Thereafter he may regard you as a true pal and confidante; a girl who "really understands," a person with whom he can take his hair down and talk things over when he's out of sorts.

But here is a word of warning: If you have such a talk, don't rehash it afterward with anyone else—neither with your sister nor your cousin nor with any of yours and John's mutual friends. If he goes out and "makes something" of it, shrug him off your mind. A boy who doesn't know when to keep his counsel is a pretty shallow chap. Yet, if he has a capacity for reserve, and makes the interesting discovery that you can talk straight to the point, with no hard feelings, and can also keep a confidence, he probably will become one of your lifelong friends, even though he never falls in love with you. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Three Injured In Traffic, 3 Drivers Held

Passenger Car, Trailer Truck Collide, Youth Seriously Hurt

Three men were arrested by police yesterday in connection with District traffic accidents which sent three persons to hospitals.

Drivers of both vehicles were arrested when a trailer truck collided with an automobile at New York avenue and Bladensburg road northeast, causing a fractured right leg and lacerations for William Harris, 18, of 503 Sixth street northeast, a passenger in the pleasure car. Harris was taken to Casualty Hospital and later transferred to Walter Reed Hospital, where his condition was described as "fair."

Truck Driver Accus

Charged with failing to give the right of way to a vehicle, Clement R. Smith, 31, of Southmont, N. C., driver of the trailer truck, was arrested and later released on $300 bond. Failure to possess a D. C. operator's permit also brought arrest to James Hutchinson, 25, of 503 Sixth street northeast, driver of the automobile. He was released on $100 bond. Both will appear in traffic court today.

Charged with leaving the scene of an accident James Joseph Carley, jr., 20, of 1809 Nichols avenue southeast, was arrested at Twenty-fifth street and Good Hope road southeast after being pursued by George E. Murnan, 2417 Good Hope road southeast, owner of a parked car which Carley allegedly struck.

Saw His Car Hit

Murnan told police he saw his car struck where it was parked in front of his home and pursued Carley to the corner, where he forced him to the curb and detained him until arrival of police. Carley was taken to No. 11 Precinct Station, where he was released on $500 bond and will appear in court today.

Two persons were hurt in a collision at Thirteenth and Monroe streets northwest. Robert E. Johnson, colored, 25, of 3 H street southwest, and a passenger in the same car, Margaret Levon, colored, 24, of 1625 Cochran street northwest, were taken to Casualty Hospital with minor injuries. Driver of the second car, police said, was Harold C. Davis, jr., 6900 Fifth street northwest.

Matthew Smith Takes Honors At Legion Model Plane Meet

Matthew Smith, 415 Madison street northwest, won both Legion and Bryan Morse Memorial trophies at the model airplane meet sponsored by the District Department of the American Legion at the Hybla Valley Airport yesterday.

More than 2,500 persons witnessed the meet in which 125 entrants participated and which was highlighted by a parachute jump by Ray Morters and a stunt-flying exhibition by Kim Scribner. Morters jumped from 11,800 feet and delayed opening his parachute until he had fallen 9,500 feet.

Earl Steinhauer broadcast events of the meet which was in charge of Frank Elvidge, chairman of the legion's aeronautics committee. The results follow:

Stick models—Frank Mitchell, first; Matthew Smith, second and Robert Sprindler, third. Fuselage—Matthew Smith, first; Paul Buck, second, and Edward Aikman, third. Class A, gasoline powered—Elliott Eccard, first; Fred Long, second, and Elliott Eccard, jr., third. Class B—Ben Voss; first; Howard Kuhn, second, and Harry Pitts, third. Class C—Jack McKeon, first; Norman McMorow, second, and Howard Kuhn, third.

Mrs. Johnson's Funeral Today

Funeral services for Mrs. Mary Linda Johnson, widow of Maj. J. Atheus Johnson, will be held at Fort Myer Chapel today at noon, with burial in Arlington National Cemetery.

Mrs. Johnson, a resident of Washington for 76 years, died Saturday at her home, the Dresden Apartments, Connecticut avenue and Kalorama road northwest, after a long illness. She was a native of Baltimore.

Anniversary Marked At St. John's Church

Oakland, Md., Sept. 29.—St. John's Lutheran Church at Red House, Garrett County, concluded the celebration of the 150th anniversay of its founding this afternoon. The Rev. Dr. A. D. Leamer, pastor of St. Mark's Church, Oakland, preached. The Red House congregation, of which the Rev. Alvah K. Jones is pastor, is the second oldest in the West Virginia Synod, the church at Aurora, W. Va., being the oldest.

Navy Must Train 460,000 to Man Great Fleet

A problem of major proportions involving the manning of the rapidly expanding United States Navy awaits the solution of the Seventy-seventh Congress. It requires about four years to train a petty officer, the backbone of the fighting fleet. It requires at least half as much time to train an efficient enlisted man in the lower grades.

Congress has appropriated for a maximum enlisted strength of 172,000 men or a little more than one-third the trained force that will be necessary when the fleet approaches its maximum authorized strength in combatant surface craft and airplanes.

The selective service law will not solve the problem. The conscription law provides for a service of only one year whereas the Navy needs from two to six years to train its personnel.

The Navy will be increased in the next year by more than 50 units, including two battleships, each of 35,000 tons, between 30 and 35 destroyers and submarines, and about 20 auxiliaries—mine-sweepers, repair ships, submarine and seaplane tenders.

By 1943 the first units of the "two-ocean" Navy will be entering the fighting line, ultimately increasing the Navy to a total of 925 ships and approximately 15,000 airplanes. The maintenance of this great fleet in full commission will require about 33,500 officers and approximately 460,000 enlisted men.

By the end of this year and before the convening of the Seventy-seventh Congress the Navy expects to reach its appropriated-for enlisted strength of 172,000 men and the preliminary training of the new men, at shore stations, will be under way.

The first increase that will be necessary if the men are to be ready to take their stations as the new units enter the battle line will be between 45,000 and 60,000 men, all of them to be acquired under the six-year volunteer enlistment system. Other increments must be provided for as the construction program progresses.

The estimate of 460,000 enlisted men and 33,500 officers as the force necessary to man the two-ocean Navy and operate the 15,000 or more airplanes, contemplates the maintenance of the fleets at war strength. That such a force will be maintained in full commision in normal times or be composed entirely of regulars is not only doubtful but highly improbable. A reserve of officers and men will be required and the Navy Department is making plans with this end in view.

The expansion of the fleet has also created an officer problem comparable to that involving the enlisted personnel. The Navy Department is face to face with the fact that the Naval Academy at Annapolis is no longer able to supply all the officers needed. The limit of expansion at Annapolis has almost been reached. A proposal to establish a second naval academy west of the Mississippi has been given consideration and has been rejected. Due to world conditions the class of 1941 at the Naval Academy will be graduated in February instead of in June.

In the opinion of the naval high command the time has come when it appears to be the wise course to plan for the induction into the regular naval service selected graduates of the Naval Reserve Officers Training Corps, men who have had four years of instruction by line officers of the Navy and whose instruction has included a number of cruises in naval vessels.

At the present time there are on the reserve lists of the Navy about 14,000 Naval Reserve officers of various classification who are subject to call in the event the Navy is mobilized for possible war action. Of this number it is estimated that less than 50 per cent are qualified for general line duties afloat, the remainder being specialists in different branches of the service.

In addition to the officer reserve the Navy has enlisted reserve of something more than 40,000 men. The plan is to increase the enlisted reserve strength to about 150,000.

A WOMAN'S

By JEAN BROWNELL

ADMIRERS of Frank Lloyd Wright who are elated by his plans for a "crystal city" here may have overlooked another specimen of his work now under construction in Falls Church, Va. It's the home of Mr. and Mrs. Loren Brooks Pope, who hope to move in sometime in November. The occasion will be historic, for theirs is the first Wright-designed house in the vicinity of Washington. Wright paid his first visit to the house last week; he said then that he considers it "a classic of the Usonian type of architecture."

A one-story, two-bedroom dwelling, it is composed of brick, glass and cypress. The plan is L-shaped, with living quarters in one wing and sleeping space in the other. A garden "hemicycle" surrounds the house. Unusual features include the heating, provided by pipes laid beneath the concrete floor, and the furniture, made of cypress-veneered plywood to match the cypress trim. The dining-room table is in sections; between meals, it can be separated and used for other purposes. Supervising the construction is one of Wright's apprentices, who is living with the Popes until the job is finished. To curious friends who ask the young couple how they persuaded the eminent architect to design their home, they reply, "We wrote and asked him."

A nurse employed by a hospital dealing largely in maternity cases returned from a downtown shopping trip recently and expressed in shop-talk terms an observation made by many other Washingtonians: "We won't be busy this months, but we sure will be swamped in October."

TODAY'S CAB DRIVER learned that his young lady passenger was on her way to teach a Sunday school class. When they reached the church, he refused to take the 25 cents she offered him in payment. "Put it in the plate for me, miss," he said.

The unquenchable Mrs. Esmond Romilly, came here from England nearly two years ago on a job-hunting expedition with her husband, a nephew of Winston Churchill. She has lost her partner to the R. A. F. but still can find work when she needs it. She is now a salesgirl at a Connecticut avenue dress shop, which is several degrees swankier than the Miami bar where she worked last. "I still want everything I see, though," she says. "It used to be gin fizzes and juleps; now it's mink, imported jersey and sequins."

Rose Society Seeks to Bring Bloom Indoors

Bidding to bring the rose out of the garden and give its beauty a place of greater prominence in the home, the Potomac Rose Society closed its two-day show last night with exhibits of the well rose-groomed table.

"Perfect" tables in one of the show rooms at the new National Museum showed that at breakfast you'll eat with the roses placed on one side of the table—apparently to leave room for the morning paper. At lunch a garland of roses festoons a basket of fruit.

The flower really comes into its own at dinner when a large bouquet stands in the center of the table with other cut flowers. "Not standing so high that you can't see who's on the other side of the table," an official pointed out.

Something For Amateur

Dr. J. A. Gamble, an official of the show, pointing to large displays of greenhouse roses, said: "We want something that can be grown under controlled conditions in the greenhouse for the amateur to aim at."

He led the way to "something to aim at"—a huge bouquet of dark pink roses of the recently developed Adolph Gude variety, which he prophesied "may some day become the most popular variety of rose in the country."

Adolph Gude was developed out of Radiance "which has literally radiated into more home gardens than any other rose," according to Dr. Gamble. The Radiance variety was discovered in 1909 by John Cook, of Baltimore.

"Radiance is pink. There's no pink Radiance," said Dr. Gamble with the finality and obscurity—to an amateur—of Gertrude Stein's "A rose is a rose is a rose."

1,460 Various Sets

Nearly all of the 1,460 various sets of roses on display were developed from three types of roses discovered about 25 years ago: Ophelia, a pink variety; Liberty, red; and Claudius Pernet, yellow.

An estimated 10,000 persons visited the show yesterday and Saturday.

Numerous prizes were awarded to amateur and professional growers whose exhibits were judged best.

High point winners among amateurs were: Mrs. Lomax Taylor, 126 points; Mrs. Jon Otto Johnson, 50; George U. Graff, 50; Mrs. A. P. Hofman, 50; Miss M. Louise Fenby, 44; W. T. Simmons, 30; Mrs. R. H. Fiedler, 30; C. E. Ross, 27; Mrs. Benedicta Rezenstein, 25; Clyde P. Clark, 24; Mrs. Charles Pickett, 22; George A. McCarvey, 22; Mrs. V. L. McKinstry, 19; William J. McCarthy, 17; R. K. Windham, 16; A. R. Hester, 15; J. A. Gamble, 14; Mrs. Eugene Scott, 14; C. M. Moore, 14; George F. Gates, 11; Mrs. E. C. Powell, 11; Col. W. H. England, 7; Mrs. L. L. Powers, 7; Miss Clara E. Fellows, 7; Mrs. J. A. Boston, 7, and Mrs. R. F. Jackson, 7.

Garden club awards went to the Fairfax Garden Club, with 168 points; Takoma Horticultural Club, 165; Woodridge, 107; Dolly Madison, 89; Hyattsville, 44, and Chevy Chase Club of Maryland, 34.

Roosevelt Leads In Winchester Poll

Winchester, Va., Sept. 29.—President Roosevelt continues to lead Wendell Willkie in Winchester's straw vote which is being conducted by Frank N. McCormick, host at George Washington's headquarters.

Since August 1, Roosevelt has polled 1,107 to Willkie's 994. The ballots are from every State. Last week, ballots cast were less numerous due to inclement weather. From 18 States, they gave Roosevelt 84 to Willkie's 59.

Miller to Lead W. Va. Democratic Club

Berkeley Springs, W. Va., Sept. 29.—Charles E. Miller, jr., yesterday was elected president of the newly organized Democratic Club of Morgan County. Other officers chosen were: Lenwood Newbraugh, secretary; John Rockwell, treasurer.

75% of Students Held Unfit for Jobs

Youth Commission Urges Vocational Training Program

Only one-fourth of the 1,750,000 persons who leave school or college each year have proper preparation for work or even a clear idea of what jobs they should seek, the American Youth Commission reported yesterday on the basis of an intensive survey.

Every community, it was recommended, should provide its high schools with realistic vocational guidance, appropriate vocational preparation, and eventual job placement. Such a system, it was said, should be the cooperative task of the whole community, through a committee representing parents, employment agencies, employers, churches and civic organizations, both governmental and private.

The survey will be published October 15 in a book, "Matching Youth and Jobs," by Howard M. Bell, of the commission's staff, at its headquarters, 744 Jackson place.

The complications of job choice are spotlighted in the statement that young people have "18,000 different kinds of job to pick from."

The commission and the Employment Service Division of the Social Security Board made the joint survey and demonstration in Baltimore, St. Louis, Providence and Dallas, and in the suburban and rural areas around each.

Occupational adjustment—to put the right workers in the right jobs—is an important aspect of national defense, if the country is to produce materials in time, it was said in the announcement of the survey's publication.

Among major conclusions of the report were:

Parents, pupils and schools should remember that only one pupil in five plans to go to college, and that working with the hands is a type of culture, too.

The schools' curriculum should be revised to include both the present general subjects and elective subjects bearing on the occupation the pupil has found, with the counselor's assistance, he is best fitted for.

The high schools should not attempt the work of specialized technical schools and try to turn out completely trained workmen and business men. They should rather give the pupil the basic education and skill that will give him a head start in mastering the details of his chosen job when he gets it.

Owen D. Young is chairman and Floyd W. Reeves director of the commission.

Ban Goods to Axis, V.F.W. Heads Urge

Chicago, Sept. 29 (AP).—The National Council of Administration of the Veterans of Foreign Wars adopted a resolution today favoring "absolute and complete" embargoes on food and military supplies to any of the Axis powers.

The resolution, directed to the President, said the Government "should intensify its own national defense program by making available to the British Empire such available military equipment as can be spared."

It also advocated immediate negotiations to obtain "Naval bases, harbors and island possessions in the Atlantic and Pacific oceans that may be vital to America's protection."

Storm-Worn Freighter, Otho, Docks in N. Y.

New York, Sept. 29 (INS).—Her starboard rail smashed and her cargo of mahogany logs lost during a seven-hour tropical storm 1,000 miles east of Bermuda, the battered Barber Lines' freighter Otho arrived in New York Harbor today.

Still in the ship's hold and apparently none the worse for the shaking up were water deer, wild pigs, a small leopard and some snakes destined for New York City and Washington zoos.

Becomes Mother Of 8-Pound Son

Mrs. William P. Buckner, jr., the former Adelaide Moffett, society night club singer, who became the mother of an 8-pound boy yesterday at New York. The father is serving a two-year sentence in Lewisburg, Pa., Federal penitentiary for mail fraud while he was chairman of a Philippine railway bondholders' committee

Thugs Hold Up Four in Crime Outbreak Here

Liquor Store Looted, Gas Station Men, Pedestrians Robbed

A liquor store was ransacked, two gas station attendants were held up, and two other men were held up and robbed yesterday as thieves made off with a crime loot totaling $450.

Millard W. Pettit, 46 I street northwest, night service manager of a gas station at 634 Florida avenue northwest, told police he was held up by a colored man with a white accomplice who ordered him into a back room at gun point after relieving him of $35.

Second gas station victim was Leonwood Williams, of 221 T street northeast, proprietor of a station at Rhode Island and New Jersey avenues northwest, who told police he was robbed at gun point by a colored man who escaped with $5.

Struck down by four colored men as he walked at Fifteenth street and Rhode Island avenue northwest, William C. Beatty, 1533 P street northwest, told police he was robbed of $40 in bills and a gold watch. Another victim was John J. Martin, 32, of 951 Massachusetts avenue northwest, who told police three colored men felled him at Tenth and M streets northwest and escaped with $16.

Thieves who entered through a rear door and apparently used a truck to carry away their loot made off with $160 in cash and nearly $200 in liquor and cigarettes from a liquor store at 1524 K street northwest.

Joseph Rozansky, owner of the store, told police he noticed the theft when he stopped by his establishment early yesterday morning to get some cigarettes for a son he was planning to visit in a Baltimore hospital. Padlocks had been removed from the rear door of the store. The loot included 36 cartons of cigarettes and 144 pints of assorted whiskies.

Her purse containing $2 in change was snatched from her arm by a white youth while she walked in front of the Supreme Court building early yesterday, Angie Smith, of 207 B street northeast, told police.

C. U. Students Given Blessing Of Holy Spirit

The blessing of the Holy Spirit yesterday was invoked upon 1,500 students and teachers of Catholic University, as the annual Holy Ghost mass was celebrated in the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, on the campus.

Marking the opening of the school year—which took place last Wednesday—the Mass was celebrated by Dr. William J. Lallou, associate professor in the School of Theology, and addressed by the Right Rev. Msgr. Patrick McCormick, university vice rector.

Msgr. McCormick stressed the purpose of the university and the necessity of cooperation between the faculty and teachers, along with the "vital importance" of having the blessing of the Holy Spirit invoked on the work.

French Help British Harass Italian Army

Troops in Egyptian Desert Drove All The Way From Syria

By Ralph W. Barnes
Copyright by New York Tribune Inc.

With the British Army in the Egyptian Desert, Sept. 29.—French troops have fought alongside the British in an armored car "screen" action provided to harass Italian legions as they advanced into the Egyptian coastal plain to Sidi Barrani.

Today I talked with officers and men of the French detachment, which has been withdrawn from advanced positions after four days of action.

The unit is one of several formed from detachments of the French army in Syria which have trickled across the Palestine and Trans-Jordan frontiers since Gen. Eugene Mittlehauser, then commander of the Allied forces in the Near East, decided to lay down arms in accordance with the armistice terms.

Drove from Syria

A short, sturdy Frenchman commanding the unit which saw action against the Italians conducted me about his carefully camouflaged desert encampment. In the course of the tour we came on a half-hidden armored car of French make.

"Those boys drove that car all the way from Palmyra, in the Syrian Desert, to join up with the British," the commander said, pointing to two noncommisioned officers and a private leaning against the vehicle.

Though the French commander was clearly proud of his outfit, he insisted on talking about what he described as the superior accuracy of the British artillery in recent engagements rather than about the exploits of his own men. News of the gallantry of these Frenchmen has spread rapidly in the desert, and at various points British officers have told me how the unit had conducted itself under fire.

Italians Driven to Cover

"On one occasion the Frenchies engaged the 'Eyeties' (Italians) with machine guns at 700 yards," I was told. "Despite the proximity of the enemy, the men remained cool and kept up a steady fire which forced the 'Eyeties' to take cover and stay there.

"The work of the French on that occasion has been cited higher up. Another time, one of the French armored lorries became stuck in the sand. Though the 'Eyeties' advanced to within less than 500 yards, the gunner continued to blaze away with one of the lorry's machine guns and a couple of squads went on working desperately until they got the vehicle out of the sand and back to safety. They're stout fellows, that unit."

Though the Frenchmen, for the most part, are wearing the tropical khaki of British army cut, the shoulder tabs of the officers indicating their rank are those they brought with them from Syria.

Australians Find War

Copyright by New York Times

Cairo, Egypt, Sept. 29.—Australian troops are preparing to join British, Indian and French troops fighting the Italians in the western desert, thus completing a long search on the part of the men from "down under" to find the war.

Australian troops arrived in Britain too late to fight in France and Belgium and none were sent to Somaliland for the brief campaign there. In the Near East the Australians were first sent to Palestine while the New Zealanders trained near Cairo.

Night Schools To Teach First Aid

A large-scale program for making first-aid instruction available for 4,000 Washingtonians with classes in every night high school in the city to provide an important phase of civilian national defense training was announced last night by the District Chapter of the American Red Cross.

Dr. Roy Lyman Sexton, chairman of the organization's first-aid and life-saving department, said the classes will start Wednesday night.

The new first-aid course, Dr. Sexton announced, will be modeled after accident-prevention and treatment programs in effect in European countries now at war. Accurate knowledge of emergency first aid in home, on the street and in the shop will be emphasized, he said.

With the Red Cross Roll Call entering its second week, arrangements for the classes were made with E. J. Lockwood, director of the night public high schools. Robert H. Duncan, director of first aid and life saving of the District chapter, will receive enrollments. Duncan may be reached through headquarters of the American Red Cross.

Classes will be held twice a week in the evening and will be open to men and women 17 years of age or older. A standard course for beginners will be given first to be followed by advanced instruction.

"With the new defense program underway," Dr. Sexton said, "the Government, in all probability, will depend upon the resourcefulness of the general public in being able to assume leadership in accident-prevention work. Whether or not armed conflict should ever encroach upon our shores, the American Red Cross finds itself constantly at war against needless suffering or death."

A. F. of L. Organizing Newsmen's Union

The American Federation of Labor yesterday took the first step toward formation of a national union of newspapermen when President William Green announced a conference on October 22 in Chicago of represenattives of 20 local unions already organized.

Green said the purpose of the conference will be to set up a national council "through which the local unions can intensify and coordinate organizing activities and build a permanent, national union for editorial workers and news writers employed on newspapers and periodicals throughout the country."

D. C. Action Sought In Blood Test Law

Canvass Shows No Organized Opposition to Plan

The question of what became of Washington's premarital blood test law arose yesterday in bold relief, coincident with the announced resignation of a Board of Trade leader in protest against failure to press for the legislation.

Charles Zurhorst, secretary of the Board of Trade health committee and chairman of its subcommittee on communicable diseases, said he is severing all connections with the organization because it has not followed through forcefully with its indorsement of the proposed law.

A canvass conducted by The Post, prompted by Zurhorst's action, revealed that the legislation in question seems to be entangled in a maze of buck-passing, apathy, and puzzling attitudes.

Dr. Ruhland Favors Plan

Questioned on the proposed bill, which would require all applicants for marriage licenses in the District to submit to syphilis-diagnostic tests:

Health Officer George C. Ruhland said he favors the plan but is waiting to hear what Capitol Hill thinks of it before seeking its enactment.

Mabel Halier, clerk of the House District Committee, said that that group forwarded to the District Commissioners, in March of last year, a draft of the proposed bill received from the Board of Trade, bearing its indorsement; and the committee is still waiting for a report from the District Building.

Dr. George M. Leiby, director of the Health Department's bureau of veneral disease control, said he believes premarital tests should by all means be introduced here, adding that he submitted to Dr. Ruhland some time ago what he considers to be the best type of bill.

A spokesman for the District Medical Society said no action has been forthcoming from that quarter because it understands Dr. Ruhland opposes the antisyphilis measure, which, incidentally, has now been adopted by 20 States in one form or another. Virginia is the latest State to make premarital blood tests mandatory.

Zurhorst, who has been waging somewhat of a one-man campaign for the bill since August, 1937, said the delay is not the result of any expressed opposition. He added:

"More than a year ago I went before Dr. Ruhland and told him why the District, with its high incidence of syphilis, should have a premarital test law. His reply was that the city was not yet ready for such a step, that the time wasn't ripe."

Since then Zurhorst has tried "dozens of times" to obtain an interview with the health officer, but he has yet to gain a second audience, he declared.

Has File on Subject

The House District Committee has a large correspondence file on the subject, including letters supporting the proposed legislation from the Federation of Citizens Associations, clergymen and other organizations and individuals, it was learned.

Dr. Leiby said premarital blood tests definitely are a desirable weapon against syphilis. A positive test, indicating the presence of infection, should not bar the sufferer from marriage, however, he added.

Rather, according to the venereal disease bureau director, applicants for marriage licenses simply should be required to certify to the clerk that they have undergone the blood examination. Then the license would be granted, regardless of the test's outcome, which would be reported only to the Health Department.

"The chief value of the plan is educational and to find cases which might not be discovered otherwise," Dr. Leiby asserted. "Prevention of marriages should not be its purpose."

Meantime, Zurhorst is hopeful that the emergence of his pet project from its mysterious hibernation is the forerunner of action—favorable action preferably, but anything, so long as it is action.

Cox Says D. C. Draft Machine Is Almost Set

All Arrangements Expected to Be Finished This Week

Selection of personnel for local draft boards should be completed and machinery for registering and drafting Washingtonians of conscript age should be set up this week, Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, selective service executive for the District, said last night.

Many more than the city's 3,454 public school teachers and employes will be required to handle registrations October 16, Gen. Cox said. He estimated that a force of 5,000 registrars will be employed with an additional 500 asked to serve as reserves.

The Junior Board of Commerce and the District Department of the American Legion will assist in the registration, Gen. Cox said.

The Junior Board, many of whose members are of draft age, has been asked to furnish 250 registrars. A call for volunteers was issued by the board yesterday.

Registrars will work in two shifts, the first from 7 a. m. to 2 p. m., and the second from 2 p. m. to 9 p. m.

Maine State Society Opens Social Season

Social season of the Maine State Society was inaugurated yesterday with a tea and musical at the District of Columbia chapter house of the D. A. R.

Justin Lawrie sang several selections, accompanied by Gertrude Troutman, 11.

Among the several hundred guests were Senator and Mrs. Wallace H. White, jr., of Maine, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Cox, and Carroll Beedy, who introduced the artists of the afternoon.

Purse Recovered First, Then Thief

What started out as a peaceful evening stroll with her boy friend ended in an unexpected bit of excitement last night for Miss Bernice M. Mills, of 1436 Geranium street northwest.

A colored man snatched her pocketbook at Sixteenth and Q streets northwest. John R. Altiere, of 2101 New Hampshire avenue northwest, her companion, gave chase, was joined by others and overtook the thief. A scuffle followed, and the pocketbook was retrieved, but the man got away again.

Five minutes later police arrested a 34-year-old colored man nearby and held him at Second Precinct station for investigation. Miss Mills identified him as her assailant.

Colored Masons Plan Visitation

Officers of the Acacia Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, Prince Hall affiliation, will begin their annual visitation of subordinate colored masonic lodges in Washington Wednesday.

Twenty lodges will be visited by the group, led by Louis W. Roy, sr., grand master. First stop will be Warren Lodge, No. 8, at 8 p. m. Wednesday in the Scottish Rite Hall, Eleventh and R streets northwest, where the theme will be "The Churchman's Place in Free Masonry."

The visitations will continue through November 27.

Association Season Opens For Citizens

Seven Groups to Meet This Week; Problems Of Traffic, Schools Will Be Discussed

Problems of District government, crowded schools, and traffic will be brought to the fore this week as seven citizens' associations meet, most of them for the first time this season.

Tomorrow the Columbia Heights association will open its first fall meeting with a discussion of "The Political Situation in the District of Columbia Today" by Sefton Darr, former head of the District Bar Association. The meeting will be held in the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church at 8 p. m.

On Wednesday, members of the Friendship Citizens Association will discuss traffic problems, consider incorporation of their unit, and plan their fall program, according to President Samuel J. Flickinger. Delegates to the Federation of Citizen Associations for this season will be elected.

Report on Hearing

Three organizations will meet Thursday night. The Bradbury Heights Association will hear reports of its representatives on a public hearing Tuesday of the Public Utilities Commission regarding improvement of transportation in that area. Also scheduled is an election of officers, the president, H. W. Austin, said.

At the same time, the Connecticut Avenue Citizens Association will meet to elect officers and view an American Airlines film, "Flagship of the Air," as well as to consider improvements to be sought this fall in that section.

The Washington Highlands organization will also meet Thursday to discuss fall business, in the home of its secretary, W. Earl Nair, 3919 First street southeast.

The initial meeting of the Randle Highlands Association will be held Friday night in the Orr School. Reports of the nominating and school committees will be made. Opening ceremonies for the new John Philip Sousa Bridge, to be conducted jointly by the citizens' associations in that area, will be discussed.

The Chillum Heights Citizens Association, also meeting Friday, will appoint a nominating committee for next month's election and decide on a permanent meeting place. Friday's meeting will be held in the Keene School, Blair and Riggs road northeast.

Calendar for the Week

This week's calendar of citizens association meetings follows:

Tuesday — Columbia Heights, Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, 1410 Columbia road northwest, 8 p. m.

Wednesday—Friendship, Janney School, Wisconsin avenue and Albemarle street northwest, 8 p. m.

Thursday—Bradbury Heights, Bradbury Methodist Church, 4327 Bowen road southeast, 8 p. m.; Connecticut Avenue, All Souls' Episcopal Church, church hall, Connecticut avenue and Woodley road northwest, 8 p. m.; and Washington Highlands, 3919 First street southeast, 8 p. m.

Friday—Chillum Heights, Keene School, Blair and Riggs roads northeast, 8 p. m.; and Randle Highlands, Orr School, Twenty-second and Prout streets southeast, 8 p. m.

Saturday—The Federation of Citizens Associations, in the board room of the District Building, 8 p. m.

Mrs. Parmelee, Widow of Banker, Dies at 77

Mrs. Alice Maury Parmelee, widow of James Parmelee, banker and financier, died yesterday at her home, Causeway, 3029 Klingle road northwest, after a short illness. She was 77.

A native of Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Parmelee was a granddaughter of Matthew Fontaine Maury, famed as "The Pathfinder of the Seas."

It was in his honor that a stained glass window, one of three donated by Mrs. Parmelee, was dedicated at the Washington Cathedral in 1935. Another was dedicated to her husband and the third to Myron T. Herrick, former Ambassador to France and a friend of Mr. Parmelee.

Mrs. Parmelee's other grandfather was John W. Maury, once mayor of Washington. Funeral services will be held at 3 p. m. tomorrow at the Washington Cathedral, with Bishop Freeman officiating, and burial will be in the cathedral crypt.

Association Plans to Widen Scope To Include Governmental Reform And Development of Art in Capital

This is the first article in a series about citizens' associations in the District of Columbia, and their efforts to make the community a better place in which to live.

Progressive, efficient and friendly, the American University Park Citizens Association opens its fourteenth season this year with a program of city-wide interest.

Although its primary activity this fall lies in attempted improvement of transportation, playground and street conditions in the park area, the group is vitally concerned with the development of the Nation's Capital in general.

Two expressed objectives of the association this year are the elimination of overlapping functions of various departments in the District government and the development of Washington as an educational center, stressing music and art.

Accomplishments last year ranged from securing supervised facilities for two playgrounds in the area and formation of athletic clubs to obtaining numerous street improvements. Since the unit's formation in 1926 to prevent construction of row houses in the park area, a prime and successful objective has always been to maintain an "A" residential zoning for the neighborhood.

One particularly effective tradition of the organization is an annual banquet, held as a means of getting community citizens acquainted. It will be given this year in February.

President of the civic group, for the second time, is James E. Maxwell, of 4945 Brandywine street northwest, an examiner in the Interstate Commerce Commission. Maxwell, who came to the community in 1937, is from West Virginia and was formerly with the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation.

He is an amateur expert on the District government and has done much to interest the group in city-wide affairs. He favors national suffrage representation for the District, but not election of local officers. Biggest handicap in the local government set-up, he thinks, is the fact that the Commissioners have had to wait for years for any reorganization bill to pass Congress and thus cannot make any radical improvements in the District government.

Purposes of the association, stated in 1926 and unchanged since, are the "improvement, development and beautification of the community, and representation of its citizens in civic affairs." Its outstanding accomplishments have included bringing gas service to the area, improving bus service in the neighborhood, beginning local garden contests and improvement of street lighting, mail, trash and street maintenance service in the community.

Next meeting of the American University Park group will be on October 10, in American University's Hurst Hall.

Other officers of the organization include E. M. Clark, vice president, and M. R. Wilkes, secretary. Delegates to the federation of citizen's associations are H. L. Colman and L. T. Savage.

The organization, which aids transients, is presently conducting a membership drive.

D. C. Court Opens Fall Term Today

2,500 Civil, 300 Criminal Cases Slated for Trial; Normal Number

Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat and the 11 associate justices of the District Court will open their autumn term of court today.

Awaiting trial are about 2,500 civil cases and 300 criminal cases.

The criminal cases are the normal accumulation, Special Assistant District Attorney John C. Conliff, jr., chief clerk, said. He added that within a few weeks the number would be reduced to about 100, when the work will be considered up to date. Because new indictments are returned once a week and some trials require postponement, it is not possible for the prosecutor ever to have a "clear" docket.

There are hopes that the court will gain enough ground in the judicial year beginning today to bring its civil docket almost up to date. The court was 23 months behind in its work last October; that is, when a case was ready for trial it was 23 months until it could be heard.

When the summer adjournment came in July, however, the jury cases were only 15 months behind and the non-jury cases only eight months. This was accomplished by the court's disposing of 2,237 civil cases last year, compared with 1,074 the previous year.

For the greater production, much credit was given to the pretrial division, begun last year under Justice Bolitha J. Laws. The division, in informal preliminary hearings, "streamlines" disputed cases so that they can be heard more quickly. Besides, the pretrial division frequently arranges settlements. This was reflected last year in the increase of settled cases to 1,288 from 755 the previous year.

Justice Oscar R. Luhring will sit in the pretrial division this year. He has been holding hearings for two weeks and has gone over about 60 cases, which will be taken up early this term.

Justice Laws will preside in the Motions Court for the term. Justices F. Dickinson Letts and Jesse C. Adkins will sit in the criminal sessions. They may be joined by a third justice to handle several cases which are expected to be protracted.

Sitting in the civil courts will be Chief Justice Wheat and Justices Daniel W. O'Donoghue, James M. Proctor, James W. Morris, T. Alan Goldsborough, Peyton Gordon, David A. Pine and Jennings Bailey.

Women Hold Communion Breakfast

Retreat League Hears Father Hogan After Mass at Cathedral

Jesus Christ was characterized as the "master spiritual propagandist" yesterday by the Rev. Aloysius J. Hogan, S. J., of Georgetown University faculty, addressing the annual communion breakfast of the Washington Laywomen's Retreat League.

He spoke before 850 women at the Mayflower Hotel shortly after the annual communion mass at St. Matthew's Cathedral, with the Right Rev. Joseph M. Nelligan, Chancellor of the Archdiocese of Washington and Baltimore, as celebrant and preacher. More than 1,000 attended the mass.

"Modern nations and men pride themselves on the thoroughness and perfection of their machinery of propaganda—political, social, economic, philosophical and theological, both constructive and subversive," said Father Hogan. "Recent months bear eloquent proof both at home and abroad of the stupendous power of propaganda."

"Jesus Christ was and is the most thorough and most successful propagandist in the world's lengthy years! Yes, the master of propaganda! His is a spiritual propaganda, concerned with the souls of man, the objects of His infinite love! In undying words he proclaimed the Divine evaluation of man's soul: 'What doth it profit man if he gain the whole world and suffer the loss of his soul?'"

The Rev. John S. Spence, spiritual director of the league, presided at the speakers' table and introduced:

The Rev. Louis F. Miltenberger, assistant pastor of St. Martin's Church here; the Rev. Charles Yingling, spiritual director of the Baltimore Laywomen's Retreat League; the Rev. John Riley, newly-named director of the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception; Monsignor Nelligan, and others. Mrs. Leo Kelly, of Riverdale, Md., is local league president.

Peace Found Only in Jesus, Guild Is Told

Egan, Lay Lecturer, Speaks at Meeting In Library Park

True and permanent peace cannot be found in "meaningless pen-and-ink treaties or helpless World Courts" but only in Jesus Christ, "author of all peace and happiness," Daniel Egan, lay lecturer, said last night in Public Library Park.

"When we look about us and see our modern world breeding all forms of vice and corruption," Egan told a meeting of the Catholic Evidence Guild, "and see those sinister monsters of godlessness and destruction, Communism and Nazism, spreading their evil influences throughout the world, even to the shores of our own country, are we not wont to wonder when the world will once more know true peace and happiness?"

"If Americans would but fall on their knees and pray," he continued, "and pray in union with Mary, they would soon see that even in this materialistic age prayer is still the most powerful force against evil . . ."

Speaking last night in Franklin Park, Miss Mary Ellen Dashiell, guild lecturer, said:

"Peace in the world must first come through peace in each individual's heart, and it is through the teachings of Christ made manifest by His Church that this peace may be found. Just as Christ had credentials to prove His divinity so His Church has her credentials to prove her divine origin and her divine teachings."

Cleveland Park Church Chancel Is Dedicated

American Standards Of Christian Living In Peril, Speaker Says

A call for America to "wake up," or lose its standards of Christian living, was heard yesterday from Mrs. D. E. Brown, addressing dedicatory exercises for the new chancel of Cleveland Park Congregational Church, Thirty-fourth and Lowell streets northwest.

Superintendent of the Middle Atlantic Conference of Congregational-Christian Churches, Mrs. Brown shared the program with the Rev. Paul W. Yinger, the pastor, who led the dedicatory ritual and delivered the sermon, and with William Carl Ruediger, church official, who gave recognition to donors of the chancel equipment and other church improvements.

"We must rally our forces to meet the challenge of the day," Mrs. Brown said before a capacity congregation, and warned of "man-made sin coming from selfishness and indifference."

"Let us not harbor the impression that we come to this house of worship because we are righteous," said the Rev. Mr. Yinger in his message, "but rather for judgment upon that which is superficial in our society."

"There may be little but blood and sweat for Christians in the next few years," he asserted, "but if we look close enough we will see God working now as ever in fulfillment of his purpose."

The choir, directed by Mrs. A. Stone, presented a special program.

The Guild Postpones 'The Time of Your Life'

Saroyan's Prize Winner Will Be Here Later; Glenn Miller and Marion Hutton Take Time Out; Baukhage Broadcasts From the Palace Stage

By Richard L. Coe
Substituting for Nelson B. Bell.

BY WIRE FROM the Theater Guild:

Because of the tremendous public demand for "The Time of Your Life," the play will stay at the Guild Theater, New York for two additional weeks, making three weeks in all beginning Monday evening. Every night last week hundreds of people were turned away and the Theater Guild and Eddie Dowling, producers of the play, received an unprecedented number of requests to extend the engagement. Washington subscribers to the Theater Guild-American Theater Society season are to see "Suzanna and the Elders" for one week beginning October 14 and "Ladies in Retirement" with Flora Robson the week of October 21, making two consecutive weeks of subscription plays. "The time of Your Life" will come to the National at an early date to be announced soon. Sincerely,

JOSEPH HEIDT, for the Theater Guild.

In other words, the Pulitzer Prize play will not open here as planned one week from tonight. Later intelligence reveals that the road tour of the William Saroyan play now will begin in Pittsburgh on October 21 and that the Washington and Baltimore engagements will be fitted in later.

While this news is genuingly disappointing, it does deserve dispassionate reflection. While the play opened last season to critical huzzahs, it did not receive overwhelming public support. It is, as anyone who has read it can see, a fine play. That it has evinced strong public interest now is an encouraging phenomenon.

Furthermore, many local subscribers who have not yet returned to town have expressed disappointment that their delayed return will deprive them of one of the series' strongest drawing cards. Added to this is the booking of two other subscription plays in the weeks immediately succeeding, the one a new work, the other one of last season's better efforts, a matter of regret to many American Theater Society subscribers who naturally do not prefer to see three of their six plays bunched into the early weeks of the season.

The unfortunate aspect of l'affaire Guild of course is that such a last-minute postponement has inconvenienced Washington's faithful playgoers, has embarrassed local drama editors, who have been deeply interested in the engagement and has hamstrung the National management from booking an attraction for the week of the seventh, a deeply regrettable act of mayhem.

So let's not get too excited about what the Guild promises is only a postponement. Bear in mind two serviceable proverbs:

"Ill blows the wind that profits nobody" and "Business is Business."

Despite excellent notices in all the national trade papers, magazines and in the local press, "The Lady in Question is not drawing the public in imposing fashion to the Metropolitan screen. So the West Coast remake of that charming French film "Heart of Paris" is bowing out of F street tonight. Tomorrow morning the magnificent, though slow-moving film of Revolutionary Days, "The Howards of Virginia," takes over the Met after two weeks at the Earle.

The town's dance band cognoscenti would have had a rare time at the Raleigh Saturday afternoon when Glen Miller and Marion Hutton slipped over from the Earle between two of their six performances. The tall, dark band leader is an aware young man who not unnaturally is intensely interested in his brothers-in-batons. He's immensely proud of his band, stressing the fact that it's teamwork and not star quarterbacking that's put the group at the top of the muchly-battled-o'er heap. Only 12 of his records, by the way, have piled up a sale of 3,500,000 discs, making him a very popular fellow in Camden, N. J., county seat of his recording company.

Miss Hutton is a real beauty and as likeable a lass to talk with as she is to watch singing "Boog It." She's got hair like cornsilk of the rarest grade, dresses with a blue eye to blue. She has several new songs lined up which she will probably introduce on five or six sustaining airings in a row, at the end of which they'll be either hot tamales or cold turkey. Her younger sister is Betty Hutton, now rehearsing in the Ethel Merman musical "Panama Hattie."

Baukhage, that analytical ten-minute-man of N. B. C.'s news staff, will join "Foreign Correspondent" at the Palace tonight. He will broadcast his comments from the Palace stage at 6:30 each evening this week through Friday. A former foreign correspondent himself, Baukhage also is known as commentator for the daily Farm and Home Hour.

CUNEIFORMS-OFF-THE-CUFF: This week's Hollywood visitor will be Walter Brennan, arriving for a two-day visit on Wednesday. Long known as one of the Gold Coast's most effective scene-stealers, Brennan won the Academy Award for supporting playing in "Kentucky," while his latest is the Gary Cooper rip-snorter "The Westerner." . . . The date's set for the Variety Club's annual dinner at the Willard. Jot it down as November 16 and expect more on this notable show world event later . . . Today's the last for B. Bernard Kreisler in Washington as Universal's branch manager. He's been upped to Special Representative in the Home Office, Rockefeller Center, New York . . . Look for the new Stage magazine October 28 which promises a "Everything all theater magazines have promised including a vigorous campaign to abolish all non-subscribers." Alexander Woollcott and Clare Boothe will be in the first index as will a complete version of "The Man Who Came to Dinner."

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Sept. 29.

Just before Louis B. Mayer planed East for his annual visit, he told me of his disappointment and Judy Garland's. They were going to surprise Mickey Rooney at his New York opening. The idea was, right after Mickey's introduction, to turn the spotlight off him and onto Judy, who would start singing in a box, and as she sang, the spotlight would go back to Mickey, with Mr. Mayer standing beside him saying, "Well, what's the matter? Why don't you go on with the show?" Instead of which, poor Judy stays in Hollywood and parts with her tonsils.

Mr. Mayer had just finished a conference with Jeanette MacDonald. She had agreed, if they couldn't find right stories, it was much better for her to do only one picture a year with Nelson Eddy, than two, as her contract called for.

Hedy Lamarr got a boost in salary, which I think has been coming to her. Though she's done less on the screen than any well-known star, Hedy still gets more publicity than ony of them. If Hedy can, she's going to buy back the house she owned and sold to Leslie Howard before she married Gene Markey. Incidentally, Gene and our society writer, Barbara Trippett, are very much interested in each other.

And when I asked Jeanette MacDonald when I could dunk the body in her swimming pool, she said, "As soon as it's finished. We've been working on the durned thing since June—had to build two retaining walls, so it will probably be ready for swimming when winter comes."

John Beal, one of our best young actors, is being tested for an important part which I do hope he'll get. His last picture, in which he gave his finest performance, was a terrific disappointment—but only because it was never seen. He played the lead in "The Great Commandment," made by a group of church people here. The picture was so good Zanuck bought it and was going to make it into an epic. And it now sits on the shelf, so John Beal's performance is lost to the American people.

The producers who have been talking about signing Alfred Hitchcock are a little late. RKO's got him for four more pictures.

When a stranger asked what kind of a guy Spencer Tracy was, a pal replied, "Well, you ask him the time and he tells you how to make the watch." Which must be a carry-over from playing Thomas Edison.

Youth Again Is Served at the Capitol Come Thursday

JUDY GARLAND AND MICKEY ROONEY
and some of the boys from Paul Whiteman's Orchestra snapped as they "Strike Up the Band," the new musical film opening Thursday morning on the Capitol screen, bringing to mind the Rooney's druming on that stage one record-breaking week ago

Wit and War Mixed on the Trans-Lux Bill

A quartet of entertaining short films vies with the stirring news pictorials for first mention in the current week's Trans-Lux bill. A screen snapshot's sequence snappily MC'd by clever Ken Murray contributes immensely to the fun with clips of old-time films showing such favorites as Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Al Jolson, and scenes from the early pictures of Charlie Chaplin, Greta Garbo, Clark Gable, and Mickey Rooney, when a cute little fellow of 9 years.

"London Before the War," with scenes of famous and historic landmarks in retrospect is timely and deeply impressive. "Old California" is a travelog in color, and not all of the scenes are of the '49 period.

The second bombing of Buckingham Palace is a feature of the news pictorials, and England's gracious King and Queen are prominently seen sympathizing with and encouraging their fellow citizens. Then, United States defense activities—the Army testing the latest and fastest plane, and machine-gun output being speeded—are pictured. The British lord of the admiralty thanks the United States for the exchange of destroyers for naval bases.

Our own Gen. Strong, just back from England, tells us of the probable length of the war. Chile and Mexico parade their military might. Wendell Willkie talks to crowds in the Northwest, and the President makes an effective statement about dictators as he is honored by the University of Pennsylvania.

A Disney cartoon, "Pluto's Dream House," completes the program.

Gayety

"FROLICS OF 1940." The Independent Burlesque Association presents the musical production in two acts and 19 scenes featuring Georgia Sothern, supported by Max Furman, Alma Maiben, Aline Payne, Jimmy Cavanaugh, Murray Briscoe, Cleo Florenz, Helen Colby, Harry J. Conley, Derby Wilson, Dick Leslie, Dance numbers devised by Max Furman. Reviewed Sunday matinee. At the Gayety Theater.

One of burlesque's outstanding personalities and a real local favorite, the inimitable Miss Georgia Sothern, is the featured attraction at the Gayety playhouse this week.

There is no other lass on the circuit who can match the speed of Miss Sothern's dance routines, and in the current revue Georgia exhibits the same cycle of numbers which has made her such a popular entertainer. Briefly, the lady is terrific.

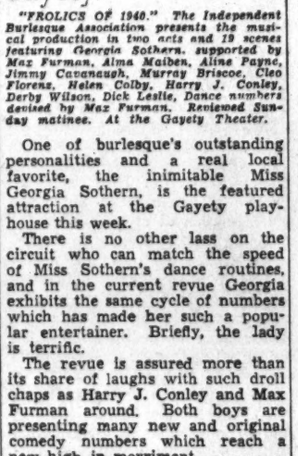
The revue is assured more than its share of laughs with such droll chaps as Harry J. Conley and Max Furman around. Both boys are presenting many new and original comedy numbers which reach a new high in merriment.

Derby Wilson, a sepian chap who recently closed a long engagement at the Harlem Club in Atlantic City, all but stole the performance. Possessing a world of personality, Wilson scores heavily with several nifty dance routines which include some very clever impersonations of famous entertainers.

Aside from the inimitable Miss Sothern, the distaff portion of the bill also features song-and-dance presented by Helen Colby, Arline Payne, and Cleo Florenz. Miss Florenz's acrobatic number is one of the highlights of the show.

Completing a well-balanced bill are Dick Leslie, a local lad who offers his impressions of radio personalities; Jimmy Cavanaugh, straight man, and a youthful and talented dancing chorus.

Singing at the Earle



RAY EBERLE
with blonde Marion Hutton, Eberle is handling the vocals for Glenn Miller and his band, currently headlining the Earle's bill

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Sept. 29.

AVIATION DEPT.: Harry Richman applied for a commission in the Army Air Corps, but was rejected because of the age-limit. He went to Washington, and saw his friend, Assistant Secretary of War Patterson. "Look, Bob," he complained, "I have 6,000 flying hours to my credit. I have a transport pilot's licence, I hold two world's records, I've won a few trophies, and Dick Merrill and I were the first men to make a round-trip flight across the Atlantic. Can you help me get that commission?" . . . "Many months ago I too applied for a commission," replied Patterson. "I was an officer in the last war. Now I'm Assistant Secretary of War. And believe me, Harry—I still can't get my commission."

LYONS

POLITICS DEPT.: Jim Farley and Jimmy Walker were some of the distinguished speakers at the Banshee luncheon in honor of Damon Runyon. Walker reminisced of his political career and said: "For 23 years I held public office—and I haven't a single regret. But believe me, I don't want another year of it . . . and I don't dare look at Jim Farley seated below me—because I know there's an echo in his eye."

CRIME DEPT.: Sam Leibowitz, who won the Democratic nomination for county court—which is tantamount to election in Kings County—is making the final preparations for his elevation to the bench in the criminal courts . . . Leibowitz, as a spectator, visited the county courthouse Thursday. And there, the lawyer whose talents saved more men from capital punishment than any other attorney in the history of the American bar, for the first time in his life heard death sentences imposed. The victims were the members of Murder, Inc. . . . Next week Sam will visit the death house at Sing Sing, to witness an execution. "A judge in the criminal courts must lose his abstraction," he said. "Seeing these things brings a realization of true responsibility."

TRAVEL DEPT.: At noon, Thursday, after the opening of his El Morocco, Proprietor John Perona was awakened by a long distance phone call from Billy Leeds, the tin-plate heir who is en route to Africa, where he will drive one of the 40 ambulances he contributed to Britain . . . "John, I phoned to congratulate you on the opening of your club two nights ago," said Leeds . . . "Not two nights ago," Perona sleepily answered. "It opened last night." . . . Leeds insisted: "It was two nights ago. Today is Friday" . . . "But today's Thursday," Perona protested . . . I'm phoning from Manila, where it's Friday now—past the International date line," said Leeds. "S'long. I hope you have a very pleasant yesterday."

RADIO DEPT.: Deanna Durbin's new film, "Spring Parade," again will reap a fortune for the producers—who always will be grateful for having discovered her. It was Cantor who first presented Deanna to the American public, when she appeared on his radio program . . . She was brought to Cantor by an intermediary whose descriptives were so enthusiastic that Eddie agreed to audition her. The girl was discreetly silent during this conversation, and followed Cantor to the audition room where her fame was to begin. Just before he opened the door to enter, Deanna spoke her first words to her discoverer. "I hope," she said, "you're not nervous."

LOCAL NEWS: Richard de Rochemont, associate editor of Life, has been elevated by Henry Luce to a new post—managing editor of the March of Time . . . Bill Hawkins, son of the Scripps-Howard executive, is becoming a columnist. He'll conduct a night club and restaurant column for the World-Telegram . . . Foreclosure proceedings have been started against a Brooklyn hall where the Christian Front and the Bund held their meetings . . . Alexis Thompson is the backer of The Famous Door which reopened Thursday night.

BUSINESS DEPT.: Thursday was "Larry Adler Day" at the World's Fair. The harmonica virtuoso was scheduled to appear there in the afternoon, and accept the homage accorded the guest of honor at these occasions, but he didn't show up. At 10 a. m. he was in his apartment, posing for an artist who was painting his portrait. The phone ring. The Capitol Theater in Washington was calling, wondering why he wasn't backstage. "Didn't you know," he was told, "that your booking here was set ahead one day—to today? You're supposed to be onstage in two hours." . . . Adler rushed for the plane, and arrived in Washington with six minutes to spare. He played on a borrowed harmonica. He had left his in the plane.

MOVIES DEPT.. Leatrice Joy, star of the silent screen, returned to Hollywood to be tested for a role in a movie produced by Joe Pasternak. She went to the make-up department and was served by the same hairdresser who worked for Miss Joy in the days of her stardom . . . The hairdresser then accompanied the star to the set, and all through the test she kept muttering imprecations in a strange tongue . . . "I am praying to God," explained the hairdresser, "and I am praying in Hungarian—so that God won't have to translate it for Joe Pasternak."

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Sept. 29 (INS).—When I saw Spencer Tracy in New York he was getting in as many shows as possible and not thinking about Hollywood. When he returns he'll be handed the script of "Dr. Ephraim McDowell," which is to be his very next picture. Dr. McDowell, in case you don't know (and I didn't until I looked him up) was a pioneer general physician who practiced surgery and was nearly lynched for his advanced ideas. He was a rugged, hearty fellow and just the sort of character that Spencer plays so well.

PARSONS

Gene Fowler is already preparing the scenario and Gottfried Reinhardt will produce it with Mervyn Leroy probably directing. What about "Tortilla Flat?" Well, M-G-M swears that it isn't true that Paul Muni will do the John Steinbeck novel, but I still have a sort of sneaking feeling that Spencer won't do it. "Dr. Ephriam McDowell" seems a so much more suitable vehicle for him and is similar to his successful movie biography, "Edison the Man."

Sabu, the fascinating little East Indian boy who delights everyone who meets him, has a date October 14 at the Warm Springs Foundation, where he will appear at the world premiere of "The Thief of Bagdad." The plans for this unusual first night were arranged under the auspices of the President and you can be sure this is one first night that will be different and without the usual lights, jewels and fanfare. But no first night will ever be enjoyed more. Sabu will wear the colorful costume of the Bagdad prince and sing to the accompaniment of June Duprez, who plays the romantic lead in the Alexander Korda fantasy. Not only the children at Warm Springs will see Sabu but so will the grown-ups as well.

Goodness, I never heard such excitement over signing anyone as universal expresses over Arch Oboler, radio genius who has been put under long term contract by Frank Lloyd. Oboler's first assignment will be to adapt and direct "The Flying Yorkshireman," which will later be presented on the radio by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Laughton. Oboler did the screen play of "Escape" and Frank believes that he has a find in the young man who will acquaint himself with technique and production methods by working with Frank first on "The Lady From Cheyenne," the initial Lloyd-Universal epic.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: May Sunday's sister Jean is the bride of Theodore J. Ptak; that was Louise Platt with Jed Harris at Emerald lodge in the valley; the Kay Feltus-Bob Preston romance is on hotter than ever. They were in a ringside seat at the ice follies. The busiest girl in town over the week-end was Binnie Barnes, who was getting ready to check in at Columbia tomorrow and also for her marriage Saturday night to Mike Frankovich; Mrs. Milicent Jaeckel's friends will be sorry to hear she is in the Queen of the Angels Hospital suffering from a fractured vertebrae,

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Arena's Notre Dame Wins Regatta Third Time

Owner Drives At Average Of 63.266

My Sin Is Second In 3-Boat Final Heat; Tom Chatfield Is Standout Skipper

By Marshall Andrews

Sleek mahogany-hulled Notre Dame, piloted by young Dan Arena, her designer and builder, yesterday skittered away twice from a dwindling field to take the President's Cup for the third time.

Her average speed for the three 15-mile heats was 63.266 miles an hour, not so good as her 64.516 which set a record for the classic in 1937. My Sin, piloted by Zammie Simmons, of Greenwich, Conn., was second with an average of 61.637, and Miss Syndicate, by virtue of staying in the race to finish third in yesterday's three-boat final heat, was third in the cup event with a 58.168-mile average.

Immediately after storming through to take the classic, Arena boarded the official boat in Georgetown Channel and received congratulations and a peck on the cheek from Miss Marty Morgan, 1940 Regatta Queen. The gold replica of the gold trophy will be presented officially at a date not determined yesterday.

The outstanding hero, though, in yesterday's climax of the fourteenth President's Cup Regatta, was Tommy Chatfield, a quiet-spoken youngster from Danbury, Conn., who became a hellion behind the wheel of a racing boat. Chatfield took everything he entered yesterday except the open event for the American speed-boat championship, where she finished second and pushed Pop Cooper, piloting Simmons' My Sin to an average of 62.300 miles an hour, better than the boat's average in the first two heats of the President's Cup race.

Pop Needed No Pushing

Not that Pop needed any pushing. Unable to raise his own Tops III, which flipped over and sank in a hot brush with Chatfield at the lower turn Saturday in the 225-hydroplane tilt, he was on hand twice today, anyhow. The 63-year-old Midwesterner borrowed Guy Lombardo's Tempo III for the 225-hydroplane race yesterday and led until engine trouble forced him out. Then he borrowed My Sin and took the powerboat championship.

Chatfield's red Viper was on his heels from the starting gun until the finish, clinging like an angry little terrier, blasting through the bigger boat's cloud of spray, leaping clear of the muddy river, weaving, bouncing, fighting for every inch of every mile. In the third of the four laps, Chatfield pressed his Viper alongside My Sin in the backstretch and the two boats, screaming through their steel throats, plunged into the lower turn in a yellow spatter of spume.

Wins Thomas Trophy

Chatfield's red hydroplane took the John Charles Thomas Trophy for 225 hydroplanes with an average speed of 65.169, almost 3 miles an hour better than the President's Cup race average. He was followed by George F. Schrafft, of Newton, Mass., in Chrissie IV, whose average for the three heats was 62.011.

Earlier, in his little 91 cubic inch Scoundrel, Chatfield took the race for that class, turning the 10 miles in two heats at an average of 46.780. Byron F. Russel, in Rustle, was second with a 44.588-mile average.

The day's toughest break was handed to George B. Ward, jr., of

Yanks Whip Nats; DiMag Wins Crown

Single in 11th Gives Joe American League Batting Title; Finale Lost by Leonard, 4-3

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

Joe DiMaggio seized his last opportunity to swing a bat in the 1940 season to pound out an eleventh-inning single that clinched for himself the American League batting championship for another year and simultaneously lifted the Yankees to a 4-to-3 victory over the Nats.

But DiMaggio's crowning wallop was unavailing in the Yankees' fight to escape third place after four successive years as pennant winners. Out in Cleveland, the Indians were choking off all Yankee hope for a second-place tie by beating Detroit in 14 innings to finish a game ahead of New York.

Aside from the tension that greeted DiMaggio's batting appearances in his bid to stave off the rush of Luke Appling, of the White Sox, in the race for hitting honors, the 1940 season at Griffith Stadium passed quietly into history—scarcely the sound of a Washington bat was heard in the late innings against Ernie Bonham, rookie pitching ace of the Yanks.

Bonham Is Victor

Bonham was the winner over Dutch Leonard in the extra-inning duel, allowing only nine hits. The Yankees took strange liberties with Leonard's knuckle ball, hammering it for 16 hits, but he settled down to pitch four scoreless innings before he yielded the winning run in the eleventh.

The crowd of 7,500 sensed DiMaggio's determination to clinch the batting crown for himself when he singled in his first trip to the plate. He held a 2-point lead over Appling, the White Sox slugger, as they entered the final day's games. DiMaggio was hitting .350 to Appling's .348.

But at the end of four appearances at the plate, DiMaggio still had only one hit to show for his efforts, and the news from Chicago was disconcerting to his hopes of holding his lead. Against the Browns, Appling had singled in both of his first two batting appearances, and would overtake DiMaggio if the Yankee slugger connected for no more than one hit and Appling gathered one more.

Later in the day, any fears DiMaggio might have had proved groundless, because Appling failed to hit in his last two times at bat, but in his ignorance of that development the Yankee slugger made good on his last chance at the plate.

Typical Leonard Loss

Leonard had one out in the eleventh when Red Rolfe put the winning run on base with a single to center. He was in serious trouble when Charley Keller followed with a single to center that moved Rolfe to third. Then it was that DiMaggio hit a 3-and-0 pitch between third base and shortstop to fetch Rolfe home with the winning run.

It was a typical Leonard defeat—his tenth of the year by a one-run margin. The big knuckle-baller, who won 20 games last season, finished the year with 14 victories and 19 defeats.

POVICH

The Tigers' capture of the American League pennant was one of the delightful little surprises that probably make baseball the game that it is. If baseball were an exact science, even the most promotion-minded club owners couldn't make a league operate for a 154-game season, but as long as it is a game strictly dependent on the human element the necessary suspense will always be available.

Now that the 1940 season has run its course, let's take a look at this American League, team by team:

DETROIT—The Tigers finished on top, but Manager Del Baker, if he has an ounce of vision, isn't banking on this same Detroit team to win the pennant again in 1941. He knows it is too much to expect that the same line-up can turn the trick another year. Charley Gehringer at second base, Dick Bartell at shortstop and Frank Higgins at third base hung in there this season on legs that were groaning. The amount of ground they covered depended chiefly on the size of the shoes they were standing in. They didn't travel much farther. The Tigers have power as represented by Hank Greenberg and Rudy York, the home-run twins. They have pitching as served up by Buck Newsom, Schoolboy Rowe and Tommy Bridges, and they have a trio of likely-looking young pitchers in Floyd Giebell, Harold Newhouser and Johnny Gorsica. But the new infielders that they need must come from the Detroit farms or from other minor league clubs. As champions, they are not permitted to spend Walter O. Briggs' money for the purchase of ready-made stars.

CLEVELAND—If the Indians had won the pennant this year, they would have entered the World Series as the weakest-hitting American League pennant winner since 1924. Only one Cleveland regular—Centerfielder Roy Weatherly—finished up in the .300 class. The Indians, with the best pitching staff, are certain to go into the market for outfield batting strength. But where are the hard-hitting outfielders to come from? Other clubs will be reluctant to part with any of that type except in exchange for some of that highly-valued Cleveland pitching. In many respects, the Indians were the best club in the league this season. Only Heaven knows how many games their internal dissension actually cost them. With the new manager they are certain to get, the Indians may yet be welded into a pennant winner, but more hitting in the outfield is still important.

NEW YORK—The Yankees will be a force to be reckoned with next season. The worst Yankee team in 12 years didn't fail by so far to win the 1940 pennant. The Yanks were carrying too many out-makers in their batting order—Frankie Crosetti, Babe Dahlgren, Charley Keller, George Selkirk and Bill Dickey—in a year when their pitching bogged down. Red Ruffing is no longer the potential 20-game winner that he was and Lefty Gomez's sore back makes him an uncertain item. But young Ernie Bonham has come through to win eight games for the Yanks in less than two months, and they have clever young pitchers in Breuer, Donald and Sundra. They'll bring up Tony Rizzuto, the clever shortstop from Kansas City, and perhaps Jerry Priddy, Rizzuto's teammate at second base. And they'll always have Joe Di Maggio, the league's best ball player. The 1940 Yanks appear to be strictly the team to beat.

CHICAGO—Jimmy Dykes did a supurb job on his White Sox in getting them into fourth place and threatening, as late as two weeks ago, to win the pennant. He had a collection of castoffs and misfits who were clicking, and there are folks who do say that Dykes' pitching was the best in the league. Certainly a staff composed of Ted Lyons, Johnny Rigney, Bill Dietrich, Jack Knott and Thornton Lee does not represent bad pitching. And in Luke Appling, Joe Kuhel and Taft Wright, the White Sox have fair power. The White Sox flaws are at second and third base. Jackie Hayes has finally bogged down, and young Bob Kennedy at third demonstrated that he is far from a major league hitter. The White Sox are the sort of team that figures to make trouble but will lack that touch of class that makes pennant winners.

BOSTON—The best team in the league, outside of the pitching, finished fifth because its pitching was the most atrocious in the league. Potentially the Red Sox have more power even than the Tigers, who are conceded to be the power club of the league. But Manager Joe Cronin too often doesn't know where his next winning pitcher is coming from, if he happens to have seen one of his pitchers last a full game. The Red Sox have an infield defense second only to Cleveland's, and an outfield that is perhaps the best in the league both offensively and defensively. But in pitching they are strictly up against it. Not a Red Sox rookie panned out this season despite the fact they bought the likeliest looking hurlers in the minors. They are the poor little rich club of the league.

ST. LOUIS—This is the team that became, in a sense, the people's choice. No longer are they lowly Browns despite their sixth-place finish. This year they were troublemakers and never to be lightly rated. They got clever pitching from Elden Auker and Vernon Kennedy, and they came up with power in Rip Radcliff, Walter Judnich and Johnny Berardino. Don Heffner at second base and Berardino at shortstop gave them a double-play combination. They lost games chiefly for the lack of a capable catcher and the unaccountable batting slump of George McQuinn. Give 'em a catcher, and the Browns could be a real power in the league.

WASHINGTON—The Nats profaned some of the best pitching in the league with some of the worst fielding and the lack of a long-distance batting punch. The Nats were real feather merchants at bat in the last month of the season when they blew sixth place to the Browns. Bucky Harris now knows where he stands with respect to 1941. He won't get anywhere unless he gets some power on his ball club. Dutch Leonard, Sid Hudson and Ken Chase have literally been carrying the Nats on their backs. The team needs a first baseman, a second baseman, a shortstop and somebody in the outfield who can pat that ball for more than a single or a double.

PHILADELPHIA—The Athletics face the 1941 season with three ball players who were good performers this year—Pitcher Johnny Babich, Catcher Frankie Hayes and First Baseman Dick Siebert. Aside from this trio, Connie Mack didn't have much. Roy Johnson's strange batting slump was a tremendous blow. Mack could get none of his infields working right and Bennie McCoy was a sad disappointment at second base. At third, Al Rubeling was tolerable enough, but the team failed to come up with an acceptable shortstop. This is one time the A's don't have it.

Lions Defeat Rams, 6-0, for First Victory

Whizzer White Scores On 20-Yard Run; Defeat Is Cleveland's First

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Sept. 29.—The Detroit Lions won their first National Professional Football League victory in three starts today with a 6-to-0 victory over the Cleveland Rams. Byron (Whizzer) White, former Colorado University All-American back, swept around his right end for 20 yards and a touchdown shortly after the third period opened to climax a 63-yard drive.

The Rams were decisively outplayed and their own scoring opportunities were nullified by fumbles or pass interceptions. Their best chance to tally came late in the first period when a 54-yard march, highlighted by the passing of Halfback Parker Hall, carried them to Detroit's 14. There they lost the ball on downs.

It was Cleveland's first league loss in two games. A week ago the Rams trounced the Philadelphia Eagles in their opener.

Detroit, held to a scoreless tie by the Chicago Cardinals and defeated lastw eek by the Pittsburgh Steelers, made 13 first downs to five for Cleveland and gained 172 yards from scrimmage to 40 for the Rams.

Thrice in the first half the Lions drove deep into scoring territory. In the first period, aided by a 15-yard run of White's and a pass interference ruling, they got as far as the Rams' 20 only to have Quarterback Gaylon Smith intercept a fourth down pass.

In the next period Center Alex Wojciechowicz intercepted a shovel pass on Cleveland's 45 and Detroit, in steady tries at the line, reached the Ram 22. Here another pass interception, this time by Jack Haman, sub center, ended the drive.

Green Bay Pros Rout Chicago Cards, 31-6

By International News Service

Milwaukee, Sept. 29.—Taking advantage of opposition mistakes, the Green Bay Packers swarmed over the Chicago Cardinals today for a 31-6 National Pro Football League victory.

The Packers sewed the game up in the opening period, scoring two touchdowns and a field goal, then adding two more touchdowns in the third quarter. The Cards made their lone score in the second period.

Intercepted passes played a big part in the Packers' win. The first touchdown, scored by Cece Isbell from the 1-yard line, after two long passes following an intercepted Card pass. Isbell passed 35 yards to Don Hutson for the second touchdown after Clark Hinkle had counted a field goal from the 30-yard stripe.

Isbell spun through center and raced 40 yards to score shortly after the third quarter opened. Another pass interception gave the Packers the ball on the Cards' 8-yard mark a few minutes later, and Hal Van Every passed to Joe Laws for the touchdown.

Lonnie Frey And Lombardi Are Injured

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Sept. 29.—The hopes of the Cincinnati Reds for victory over the Detroit Tigers in the World Series standing Wednesday were wrapped up in adhesive tape today.

On the last day of the season, when the rest of the Reds were getting up a preseries sweat against the Pittsburgh Pirates, Catcher Ernie Lombardi could only limp around the sidelines, and Second-baseman Lonnie Frey wasn't in uniform at all.

Whether either would play in the first game, or any game, against the Tigers, was still in doubt. Lombardi has a sprained right ankle, stiffly taped, and Frey has a broken toe on his right foot.

Doesn't Feel Good

The titanic catcher took a few cuts in batting practice today, but couldn't pivot and admitted afterward that the experiment wasn't much of a success.

"It doesn't feel very good," he grunted, as he hobbles into the dugout. "I don't know whether I can go or not."

Manager Bill McKechie was noncommittal about the outlook for both Lombardi and Frey.

"We can't do anything but wait."

Pittsburgh, Sept. 29.—The Brooklyn Dodgers, of the National Pro Football League, today celebrated "homecoming day" for their coach, Dr. John Bain Sutherland, by drubbing the Pittsburgh Steelers 10 to 3 in the city where Sutherland attained national fame as a collegiate mentor.

The game was played in Forbes Field, almost within the shadows of the towering University of Pittsburgh cathedral of learning. It was at Pitt that the tall Scot became a gridiron great, first as a guard on a Pop Warner team, then as Pitt coach, a post he held for 15 years before resigning because of disagreement over athletic policies.

G. U. Lone Impressive D. C. Eleven

Hoyas Uphold Local Prestige as Terps Lose, G. W. Stumbles

By Jack Munhall.

With Maryland rudely upset by "breather" Hampden-Sydney which didn't give the Terps a breathing spell and George Washington hard pressed by little Mount St. Mary's, it remained for powerful Georgetown to uphold District college football prestige over the opening week-end.

The Hoyas, off their 66-0 rout of Roanoke, are firmly entrenched at the top of the local pack, and from all indications they will be difficult to dislodge. Even should Catholic University, which won't open its season until Detroit is played Friday, prove strong beyond all expectations it is doubtful that the Cardinals have a team to compare with Georgetown.

It was not so much the Hoyas' ten-touchdown margin over Roanoke that impressed observers as it was their flawless blocking and tackling for an inaugural appearance. The Hilltop squad that Jack Hagerty has assembled to bid for a third straight unbeaten season was as workmanlike as a professional eleven. There was no wasted motion. Every man knew his job and knew how to execute it perfectly. This is definitely a Georgetown team that will make few mistakes.

However, the Roanoke game hardly figures to have done Georgetown much good in preparation for stiffer battles to follow. Unless the Georgetown players are far smarter than the average, they are going to be just a little surprised Friday night when Temple refuses to fall over and play dead.

Therefore it would seem that Hagerty's biggest task in preparing his lads for what is sure to be a stiff tussle with a strong Temple squad will be in deflating hat sizes. He must make sure that the Georgetowns don't really believe they are as good as they looked against little Roanoke.

For in facing Temple, under the coaching of smart Ray Morrison, the Hoyas will be engaging a team that year in and year out is capable of waging fierce battle with the best. Always the Owls are rugged defensively, and this season they have an offense to go along with their traditional rock-ribbed line.

C. U. Opens Against Detroit Friday; G. U., G. W., Md. Travel

This they proved in their opener Friday by rolling up 64 points to only 7 for Muhlenberg. It also is a much different Temple eleven under Morrison, famed originator of S. M. U.'s "Flying Circus." Whereas in the past a team could set its defense for Temple's steady stream of power reverse plays through tackle, now an Owl opponent must be prepared to meet a versatile and tricky offense. Temple is definitely air-minded under Morrison, and at the same time it has retained enough of its former bone-crushing attack to make it doubly dangerous.

Tough sledding also is ahead for the other District elevens. C. U. will travel to Detroit to play a Titan team that is rated about tops among the Midwest independents. George Washington will be in New York Saturday to engage defensively formidable Manhattan, and Maryland will pit its comebacking squad against strong Penn in Philadelphia.

20,000 Fans See St. Mary's Upset Gonzaga, 16 to 0

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, Sept. 29.—St. Mary's Gaels galloped to an impressive 16-to-0 upset victory over Gonzaga's Bulldogs today before 20,000 fans.

With a team numbering several inexperienced players and considerably outweighed, St. Mary's at the kickoff was the short-ender but took charge from there on and, except for a few Gonzaga flurries, held control throughout.

Jack Doyle Picks Detroit Tigers Over Cincinnati

By International News Service

New York, Sept. 29.—Jack Doyle, Broadway's wizard of odds, tonight established the Detroit Tigers as favorites over the Cincinnati Reds in the World's Series, opening Wednesday in Cincinnati. The prices in Doyles book were:

Seven to 10 against Detroit. Even money against Cincinnati.

For the opening game it was 4 to 5, you pick 'em. And against any team winning four straight, his prices were Detroit, 7 to 1, and Cincinnati, 8 to 1.

Max Schmeling Seriously Injured In 'Chute Training

Stockholm, Sept. 29 (U.P.)—Max Schmeling, former world's heavyweight champion, has been seriously injured in Germany while training Nazi parachute soldiers, the Swedish newspaper Aftonbladet reported tonight from Berlin.

Schmeling is in a hospital and his wife, Anny Ondra, former German actress, is nursing him, the dispatch added.

(It was reported shortly after the outbreak of the war that Schmeling had been assigned to the German parachutist forces.)

Congressional Bows To Beaver Dam; Suburban Scores On New Ruling

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Congressional and Manor clubs bowed out in first-round upsets of the Maryland State Golf Association team championships yesterday as five District and as many Baltimore aggregations advanced to the second round. Two of the latter, Baltimore C. C. and Rolling Road, drew byes.

Biggest surprise of the day was the elimination of Congressional's former champions, over their home course, by a well-balanced Beaver Dam line-up. The score was 10 to 8.

Manor battled Suburban to a 9-9 tie over the latter's course in Pikesville but the Suburban team was awarded the match under a new ruling that gives the match to the team winning the most individual matches. Suburban won 3, Manor 2 and one was halved.

Locally, Chevy Chase swamped Green Spring Valley by the biggest score of the day, 15-3, while Woodmont doubled the score on its old rival, Woodholme, winning 12-6, in intercity matches. Capital easily defeated Argyle, 14½ to 3½.

Manor Loses to Terra Mariae

Washington teams batted only .333 in Baltimore, Indian Spring's defending champions handing Bonnie View a 13-5 defeat but Manor lost and Terra Mariae, last year's finalists, were too strong for Kenwood, winning 12-6.

In the only all-Baltimore match of the day, Elkridge pulled a mild surprise by defeating Hillendale.

Wiffy Cox and Billy Shea were the stars of the Congressional team but Beaver Dam had too much power through the 12 men, scoring in every match. Cox was 7½ as he and M. Parker Nolan won 2½ points over Al Houghton and Forrest Thompson while Billy Shea's back nine of 33 enabled him and Ralph Bogart to take the odd point from Volney Burnett and Eddie Bean. Beaver Dam thus spotted the losers a 4½-1½ lead but won a majority of the points in every other match.

Some of the hottest scoring of the day was exhibited in the No. 1 foursome of the Capital-Argyle match, over the former's course. Pro Tony Sylvester and George Molloy, with a best ball 66, won 2½ points over John Holzberg and Maurice Cooper.

Larkin and Nordlinger Win

Gene Larkin and Howard Nordlinger blanked Carroll McMasters and Joe Wilner for the first three points in the Woodmont-Woodholme match that sent the locals into the second round for the first time in years.

Green Spring Valley's first three foursomes held Chevy Chase to a 6-3 score but the hosts scored three point shutouts in the last three matches. Page Hufty and John Brawner lost two points to W. S. Colman, jr., and L. Perrin, of the visitors.

George Diffenbaugh and Johnny Bergelin, Kenwood's top duo, defeated Johnny Flattery and Otto Greiner, of Terra Marie, as the Kenwood pro holed a pair of approach shots to figure in the only victory of the locals.

Mel Shorey and Roger Peacock put together a best ball 68 to win all three points from Andy Gibson and Dr. E. G. Schmidt in the top match of the Indian Spring-Bonnie View encounter.

CAPITAL 14½; ARGYLE 3½

Tony Sylvester and George Molloy, Capital, scored 2½ points to ½ for Maurice Cooper and John Holzberg; George Borseri and Henry Cohan, Capital, scored 3 points to 0 for Nolan Gibson and Richard Mothershead, Argyle; Billy Houghton and Pat Martino, Capital, scored 3 points to 0 for E. Willmet and Martin Moore; Argyle; Frank White and Russ Hollebaugh, Capital, scored 1 point to 2 for Walter Lephew and Fred Murray, Argyle; Ken Spencer and S. S. Al Treder will accept post entries until noon today. Qualifying starts at 1 o'clock and the low 16 teams will battle it out over the match play route starting tomorrow morning. Lewis Worsham and Ralph Bogart won the event last year.

Dom DiMaggio, Finney Sign for '41

Boston, Sept. 29 (AP).—The last echoes of the cheering hardly had died in Fenway Park today before Dom DiMaggio, the Red Sox's outstanding rookie center fielder, and Lou Finney, outfielder and first baseman who led the American League in hitting part of this season, signed their 1941 contracts.

The two went into a huddle with Red Sox Owner Tom Yawkey and Manager Joe Cronin after a double victory over the Philadelphia Athletics. Neither the Sox management nor the players disclosed terms of the contracts.

a run. Rolfe tripled to the right-field wall, Case failing to make a shoestring catch and the ball bounding past him. Then one of Leonard's tricky knucklers escaped Rick Ferrell and Rolfe scored on a passed ball.

The Nats tied the score at 1-1 in the same inning with the aid of Rolfe's nuff of Welaj's grounder, Travis' single to center and Bloodworth's hot-shot single off Bonham's thigh scored Welaj, who had advanced to third when DiMaggio bobbled Travis' hit.

Nat Threat Fizzles

Rookie Mike Chartak put the Yanks in a 2-1 lead in the fourth when his double to the left-field wall scored Dickey, who walked. In the sixth, Bonham himself boosted the Yanks' lead to 3-1 when he doubled to left with two out after Dahlgren and Crosetti singled.

Cecil Travis' triple to deep center and Bloodworth's single to center cut the Yanks' lead to 3-2 in the sixth, and in the seventh Sherrard Robertson led off with an infield single that paved the way for the tying run. Leonard sacrificed him to second and with two out Case got the run home with a single to left.

But Bonham surrendered no more runs. The Nats threatened in the eleventh when Walker led off with a single to center, put Travis and Bloodworth flied out. Vernon stimulated the rally with a lucky hit off Crosetti's chest and Robertson drew a walk that filled the bases, but Bonham disposed of Rick Ferrell on a fly to left and the Nats had lost their last ball game of the season.

Notre Dame Wins Regatta Third Time

Beats Out My Sin, Miss Syndicate for President's Cup

Wilmington, Del., piloting Hi-Ho II in the final heat of the race for Class E inboards. Disqualified at the start for jumping the gun, he pushed on ahead, unaware that he was out of the race, took the lead and held it until near the end of the second lap when Hi-Ho rolled over on the lower turn, landed on her bottom and brought Ward in, hardly wet, to learn he had risked his neck for nothing.

Miss Twilley Wins

Something of the sort hovered over Polly Wright, of Philadelphia, who piloted Jack Hyde's Gipsy Lass far out in the lead in the Ladies Free-for-All until engine trouble put her out in the last half of the last lap. Polly was out anyway, but she didn't know it, and took the green flag for the last lap with a jubilant, victorious wave of her hand. She had been disqualified at the start for beating the gun.

As it turned out, the last boat to finish won the race. Everybody else was disqualified for one thing and another, and Dorothy Twilley, of Baltimore, loafing along in C. Merritt Twilley's Miss St. Paul, captured the event.

A Washington lad, George Brinkerhoff, was awarded a handsome solid silver sombrero by Commander Manuel Zermeno Araico, naval attache of the Mexican Embassy, for winning the Class E inboard race after Hi-Ho's double trouble. He was presented with the hat aboard the Coast Guard Cutter Calypso, and drove his Monk II back to the pits gleefully donning and doffing the trophy.

Five World Marks Fall

Five world records fell during mile trials yesterday morning, one of them twice.

Arena took out Notre Dame and set a new record of 98.227 miles an hour for supercharged boats of 725 cubic inches displacement, the Gold Cup class. Then William E. Cantrall, who had set two new non-supercharged records Saturday, drove his Why Worry 98.368 miles an hour to establish a new record for supercharged as well as non-supercharged boats in the cup class.

Don Whitfield, in Annihilator, set a mark of 40.598 for midget outboards; W. Earle Orem put up a record of 50.183 for the Pacific One Design Class, and Ward shoved Hi-Ho along at 58.395 for a new record for Class E racing runabouts.

Why Worry thereafter had bad luck, being forced out of the President's Cup race in the second heat by engine trouble, but not before she had served an excellent purpose. Why Worry stayed in long enough to push Notre Dame so hard the coming champion was forced to run its fastest lap of the race.

Man of the Month

The Man of the Month contest is sponsored jointly by The Washington Post and Station WJSV. Following each of the Nats' games, Arch McDonald will award points to Washington players as he deems performances merit. The Man of the Month will be presented with a $50 merchandise order by The Post.

By Arch McDonald

Station WJSV Baseball Broadcaster

Winner of the season's final Man of the Month contest among the Nats was:

Rightfielder John Kelly (Buddy) Lewis.

The most consistent player on the team through the month of September, Lewis wins The Washington Post's gift of a $50 merchandise order on any Washington store of his own choosing.

Lewis won the September contest with a powerful batting surge that lifted his average to .315 and with his improved fielding. He amassed 6 points in the daily distribution of honors to beat out Pitcher Dutch Leonard for Man-of-the-Month distinction by 9 points. Lewis' 66 points is the highest total ever to win the prize this season.

Sid Hudson finished third in the September contest with his 52 points and George Case, with 47 beat out Gerald Walker for fourth place.

Leonard was awarded 10 points yesterday despite his defeat by the Yankees. He held the Yankees scoreless from the sixth to the eleventh inning before losing, 4-3. Other point awards yesterday:

To George Case, 4 points, because he drove in the tying run in the seventh with his single with two out.

To Sherrard Roberison, 4 points because he twice opened innings with singles and scored the tying run in the seventh.

To Cecil Travis, 4 points, because, he made two hits, including a triple, which figured in two runs.

To Jimmy Bloodworth, 4 points because he singled twice and drove in two runs. The totals for September:

Buddy Lewis	68	Jimmy Pofahl	21
Dutch Leonard	57	Joe Krakauskas	19
Sid Hudson	52	Rick Ferrell	18
George Case	47	Jake Early	11
Gee Walker	43	Rene Monteagudo	11
Jimmy Bloodworth	40	Walter Masterson	11
Ken Chase	39	Arnold Anderson	5
Cecil Travis	37	Johnny Welaj	5
Jack Sanford	32	Sherrard Roberison	4
		Alex Carrasquel	4

With CONSIDINE

Cincinnati, Sept. 29.—Tris Speaker looked up from his flagon of champagne, at one of those spontaneous combustion victory parties that sprang up in the Hotel Cleveland the other night, and he said, "What's going to become of Detroit?"

CONSIDINE

The point was well taken, even though the Tigers were then and there celebrating one of the most unexpected pennant triumphs since the Braves won in 1914 after scraping bottom until after July 4. Unless the league puts through some new rules the Tigers' chances of following up the 1940 win with one next year and the year after are nil.

They're through, because they won.

Last winter Clark Griffith lined up seven American League owners and put over one of the most extraordinarily prejudiced pieces of legislation in baseball history. Convinced the Yankee reign in the American League would never end, the owners of rival firms voted to restrain the A. L. pennant winner from making any deals in their league for a year after winning. That was tantamount to saying that the Yankees would not be permitted to hire seasoned replacements during 1940 for the worn parts of its baseball machine. They were permitted to hire any National League player who manag

Laurel Opens for Annual 25-Day Race Meeting Wednesday

Seven Rich Stake Races For Session

Opening Program Topped by $7,500 Capital Handicap; Steeplechase Listed

By Walter Haight

Maryland's fall racing season edges right up to Washington's big pay roll on Wednesday when the sport of kings, big-time style, opens a 25-day stand at Laurel Park on the Washington-Baltimore boulevard. Until the eighth race at dusk on October 30, the bangtails and the would-be mutuel wreckers will stage their battles at Maryland's most beautiful race track.

Although off to a poor start, Havre de Grace's meeting gained momentume and action ended there with a 15 per cent increase in betting over last year. With Washington offering stanch support all last summer to the smaller tracks, there is every indication that Laurel will have a succesful meeting.

Some of the coldness that marked several Laurel meetings seems to have been tempered. G. L. Stryker, who took over the presidency last year, has become acclimated to his post and will be on hand to welcome the crowd. Young Frank J. Brady has succeeded his late father as the treasurer of the track and has taken over the duties that add up to general manager.

Big Stage Line-up

Laurel has a stake line-up that should draw the best horses. The big races, seven of them, have been distributed over the month, mostly on Wednesdays and Saturdays. The stakes include action for sprinters, distance horses and steeplechasers. The tests range from 2-year-old battles to those for the handicap division.

The track will have all the modern conveniences, including the Puett electric starting gate, the electric photo-finish camera, the American totalizer and last, but far from least, Tommy Daly in charge of calling the races on the public address system.

Posttime for the first race will be 1:30 p. m. The daily double will be conducted on the first and third races with the daily steeplechase in second position on the program.

Here are the stakes and the dates on which they will be run:

Wednesday, Oct. 2—Capital Handicap, $7,500 added, six furlongs, 3-year-olds and up.

Saturday, Oct. 2—Richard Johnson Stakes, $5,000 added, 6 furlongs, 2-year-olds.

Saturday, Oct. 2—Laurel Stakes, $7,500 added, 1 mile, all ages and the Maryland Futurity, $5,000 added, 6 furlongs, Maryland-bred 2-year-olds.

Wednesday, Oct. 16—Gov. Ogle Steeplechase Handicap, $3,500 added, 2 miles, 3-year-olds and up. and up.

Saturday, Oct. 19—Maryland Handicap, $7,500 added mile and a quarter, 3-year-olds and the Spalding Lowe Jenkins Handicap, $5,000 added, mile-and-a-sixteenth, 2-year-olds.

Wednesday, Oct. 23—Chevy Chase Steeplechase Handicap, $3,000 added, 2½ miles, 4-year-olds and up.

Saturday, Oct. 26—Washington Handicap, $15,000 added, mile-and-one-quarter, 3-year-olds and up and the Selima Stakes, $10,000 added, 1 mile, for 2-year-old fillies.

A study of the records shows that Laurel is considerably "faster" than Maryland's other three major race tracks, the local course having better time marks for six of the seven accepted distances than any of the others.

Only in 6-furlong races does Laurel's record fail to hold first place. Havre de Grace and Bowie each boast a mark of 1:10 3-5 while Laurel and Pimlico share the same record, 1:10 4-5.

Laurel Has Edge

However Laurel's 5½ furlong record is 1:04 3-5, three-fifths of a second faster than the best any other Maryland course can show.

In races at a mile or longer Laurel holds a distinct edge, this track showing the fastest time at a mile, a mile and 70 yards, a mile and a sixteenth, a mile and an eighth and a mile and a quarter.

Hourless holds the mile and a quarter mark of 2:02 set in 1917. At Pimlico, the next best time is 2:04 2-5. It was Roamer who set the mile and an eighth record in 1914, completing the 9 furlongs in 1:49 3-5. That bests Havre de Grace's mark by a fifth of a second.

Back in 1916 Boots stepped a mile and a sixteenth at Laurel in 1:43 2-5, three-fifths better than Pimlico's 1:44 which is low among the other three courses.

The mile and 70 yard record is shared by Pilate (1932) and Dark Hope (1934) at 1:41 1-5 with Pimlico again in second place at 1:42 1-5. Two seasons back Jacola raced a mile in 1:37, incidentally beating Seabiscuit. That is three-fifths of a second faster than any other track in the State can show.

Andi n the 5½ furlong event, previously mentioned, it was Follow On who established the record in 1931.

Track Supt. Woods Dickerson has had the Laurel racing strip open for workouts for some time and horsemen whose charges have been runnign over the course report it in excellent condition, so there is a chance that with fair weather prevailing over an extended period, that Laurel patrons again will see horses winning in record time or mighty close to it.

Gridman Breaks Leg

Detroit, Sept. 29 (AP).—Bill Conkright, regular center of the Cleveland Rams, suffered a broken leg in today's National Professional Football League game with the Detroit Lions. Coach Dutch Clark said tonight that Conkright would be out for the season.

10-Goaler Shows Drive He'll Use Here Sunday

Cecil Smith (hitting the willow in foreground) puts plenty of drive behind this shot. You'll see Smith, who ranks with Stewart B. Iglehart as one of the 10-goal poloists in the United States, in action Sunday at Potomac Park in the Bundles for Britain benefit matches. He's shown in action in a recent match on Long Island

The Post's ace handicapper is taking a couple of days off to go fishing with his friend, Ralph Murdock. He has been making suckers out of his followers for a long time and now makes a bid at the rockfish down Piney Point way. But seriously, Bill had a good meeting at Havre de Grace, picking 33 winners in 91 races and having some six others beaten right on the wire. His best bet got home seven times in 13 days, so let's wish him luck. He will be seeing you again Wednesday morning, exclusively in The Post

Horses to Watch At Laurel Track

FLOWER PARADE—Came up as a paddock tip last out and was second after being slightly bothered in early stages. Watch out next time.

DIZZY DAME—Carried wide into stretch in recent outing. There's a race for this one in the book.

RADIO—Raced in heaviest going along rail last week and was given a bungling ride. With better handling this one should score.

BON JOUR—Off far back in last and closed much ground on outside. Should be ready for question next out.

HAZEL W.—Ran out badly at first turn the other day which accounts for poor race. May go back in sprint and take it all.

ANNIE ALONE—Made too much use of in early stages of that last. With more intelligent riding she will win.

EARLY MORN—From disappointing barn but can turn back first-flight sprinters and I'm looking for an awakening.

BATTLE WON—Failed as favorite last Saturday after being off poorly. That race must be tossed out.

KNOXVILLE—Victim of poor racing luck at the other track. Likely to get home soon at good odds.

MOLASSES FRANK—Two bad rides and one misjudged one have kept this plater out of the winner's circle.

Indians Nose Out Tigers In 14th, 3 to 2

Finish in 2d Place One Game Behind Detroit; Milnar Wins

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Sept. 29.—The Cleveland Indians fought their way to a 3-to-2 victory over Detroit here today in a 14-inning battle to take second place in the American League.

The Redskins thus finished one game behind the Tigers and one ahead of the third-place Yankees. The victory gave Cleveland two out of three in the pennant series, but they needed a sweep to win.

Al Milnar went the route, limiting the champion Bengals to 10 scattered hits, walking only three and fanning five. It was his eighteenth triumph against 10 defeats.

Tebbetts Charged With Misdemeanor

Cleveland, Sept. 29 (AP).—A warrant charging assault and battery was served on Catcher Birdie Tebbetts while his Detroit Tiger teammates were batting in the seventh inning of their game with the Cleveland Indians today. Detroit club officials posted $200 bond.

The charge is an outgrowth of the vegetable throwing spree during Friday's game in which the Tigers won the pennant. A basket of tomatoes was dropped on Tebbetts. Police picked Carmen Guerra, 25, out of the crowd as the thrower. He filed a suit for $5,000 damages alleging Tebbetts rushed up and struck him as police held him.

The assault warrant, issued on Guerra's complaint, requires Tebbetts to return to Cleveland to defend himself.

Flaherty Scouts Lions in Cleveland; Brooklyn Looms As Title Threat

By Al Hailey
Post Staff Writer

The idle Washington Redskins rule the National Professional Football League roost as the only undefeated, untied club in the Eastern or Western divisions, but yesterday's results hardly can be expected to cheer Coach Ray Flaherty when he returns today from Detroit.

In Detroit yesterday to scout his October 27 opponents, the Lions, in their 6-0 upset of the Cleveland Rams, Flaherty this morning will start work for next Sunday's invasion of Pittsburgh to meet the rejuvenated Steelers.

While the Steelers, along with the Rams and the Chicago Bears, suffered their first defeats of the season in the past week, the Pittsburgh club supposedly lost on a fluke to the team Flaherty expects most trouble from this season in his division—the Brooklyn Dodgers.

Brooklyn Is Threat

Brooklyn's defeat of Pittsburgh yesterday leaves the Dodgers outstanding as the chief threat to Redskin hopes for the Eastern title this year, the Steelers having previously tied New York, 10-10.

In their one-touchdown victory over the Steelers the Dodgers showed the power that enabled them to almost overhaul and beat the Redskins, but reports from Pittsburgh described the victory as tainted.

Late in the game, Pittsburgh's George Platukis suffered a lapse of memory after taking a blocked placement kick and chose to step out of bounds. He had a clear field ahead of him, but said after the game he forgot pro football rules allowed him to run with the ball.

Pittsburgh's loss left the Eastern Division in a three-way tie for second, with Philadelphia lagging along with three defeats—all by one-touchdown margins—marring its records.

White in Form

Western division play yesterday was marked by the return to form of the Lions' Whizzer White, and the rebound of the 1939 world champion Green Bay Packers.

The Packers came back with a roar after their Wednesday's 41-10 rout by the Chicago Bears and conquered the Bears' conquerors of Saturday night—the Chicago Cardinals—by a convincing 31-6.

With White gaining more than half the Lion's ground, Detroit hamstrung the powerful Rams and entered a four-way deadlock with the Rams, Cards and Bears for second place in the Western division.

Results thus far leave the Dodgers out in front as the Redskins' main threat in the Eastern loop, while the Packers' old-time form puts them out in front to repeat in the Western circuit, with the Rams and Bears as the possible "dark horses."

Bosox Beat Macks Twice, Tie for Fourth

By International News Service

Boston, Sept. 29.—The Boston Red Sox edged into a tie for fourth place in the American League today, slugging the Philadelphia Athletics twice by scores of 9 to 4 and 4 to 1.

The twin victories came as the Chicago White Sox dropped their season finale to the St. Louis Browns, 2 to 1, giving both Sox '82 wins and 72 losses for the season.

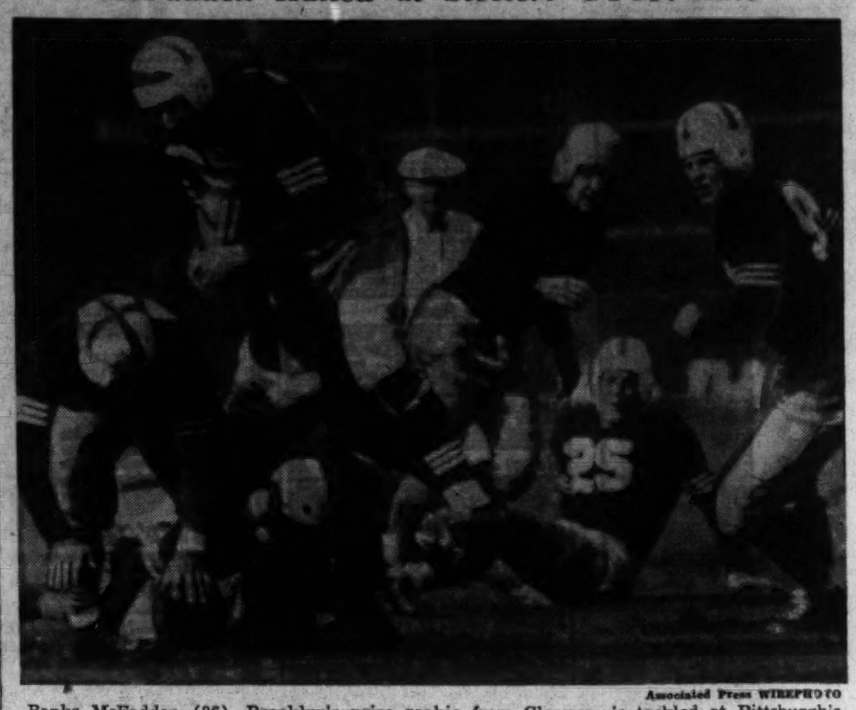
McFadden Halted at Steelers' 1-Foot Line



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Banks McFadden (26), Brooklyn's prize rookie from Clemson, is tackled at Pittsburgh's 1-foot line after a 30-yard gallop through the Steelers on a reverse from Ace Parker. George Platukis is the Steeler making the tackle. Action came in the first quarter of yesterday's 10-3 Dodger victory in Pittsburgh Post Grad . . .

By Jack Munhall

Unless this department suffered from optical illusions Saturday night as Georgetown's fleet backs tore through Roanoke at will, the Hoyas have a group of backs who, for speed, can match those of any other college team . . . Heading the Hilltop speedsters are Jack Doolan and Lou Ghecas . . . Also in the whiz class are Al Kull, Jack Spencer and Fred Agnew . . . The Georgetown line isn't exactly heavy-footed either, for center Al Matuza only last summer won the 100, 220 and 440 in an All-Lithuanian track meet in New York . . . Joe Bunsa, former footbal and boxing star at Catholic University, is working here at the Alien Registration office . . . Tommy Oliver, another former Cardinal athlete, is a Pennsylvania State Trooper . . . Last year and in 1938 Tommy coached the football team of Panama City, (Fla.) High School and one of his players was Willard Blackburn, now candidate for the George Washington varsity.

MUNHALL

Walter Fedora, the George Washington fullback, is considered sure-fire professional football timber by no less an astute judge of grid flesh than Tuffy Leemans . . . Other local college gridmen who have attracted the attention of pro scouts are Augie Lio, Al Bloxis and Al Matuza, of Georgetown, and Mike Monchlovich, G. W. center . . . Matuza, you will recall, made such an impression last season that one National Professional League team had his name on their draft list despite the fact that Matuza had another year at the Hilltop.

Coach Bill Reinhart, of George Washington, is still chuckling at his success in getting Bill Bess, most sought after of all Illinois high school football players last year . . . Bess, a center made the All-Illinois eleven two consecutive year.

Tch, tch Department—All that bars the way of resumption of the Washington and Lee-V. M. I. football rivalry is a small group of brass hat school officials . . . Athletic heads of both the Lexington, Va., colleges privately admit their desire for a renewal of athletic relations which were severed in 1907 after a fist fight broke up a baseball game between Key-dets and Generals. . . . But the aforesaid school officials with the same narrow-mindedness that typifies those who are still fighting the Civil War, insist that orderly relations could not be maintained because of the intense feeling between the student bodies . . .

Certainly such a contention is given no proof by the bitter but friendly rivalry between Georgetown and George Washington, which finally have buried their hatchet.

Rumor has it that one of the big reasons for the improvement of the William and Mary football team is the money contributed to the school's athletic fund by President John Stewart Bryant, the wealthy Virginia newspaper publisher . . . Bryant, it is said, draws his presidential salary and then turns all the money over to the expansion of athletics, particularly football . . . Incidentally, it is a mystery to William and Mary football coaches how their team got such a build-up this season, for they declare the material hardly waranted the optimistic predictions . . . and the record of the Indians to date would seem to bear out the coaches, for they have lost to both North Carolina State and Navy.

Joe Mihus, V. M. I.'s promising sophomore fullback, is a younger brother of George Mihua, Carnegie Tech's 1939 All-America fullback who has returned to school after deciding not to enter the professional ranks until after graduation . . . Joe, a six-foot, 195-pound graduate of Stew High School, won All-Western Pennsylvania football merit in 1938 captured the shot put and discuss throwing championships in the State track meet, and played regular centerfielder for his high school nine . . . V. M. I. officials believe he may be as versatile athlete as was aul Shu . . . Did you hear that Sunny Jones, G. W.'s star tackle of last season, was married last month in Kentucky to the former Marjorie Moorman, a G. W. coed . . . Best man at the wedding was Botchey Koch, who resigned last year as Colonial line coach.

Gun Club Holds Shoot At Bennings Saturday

The Washington Gun Club will hold a registered tournament Saturday over its traps at Bennings, adjoining the Potomac Electric Power Company.

Three trophies will be awarded for the 100 16-yard targets. There also will be purses for each 25-target event. The traps will be open for practice at noon with the program scheduled for 1:30 p. m.

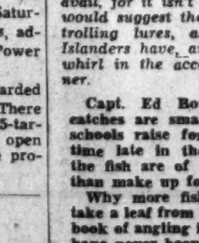
Ackerman ON FISHING

White Marlin Landed Off Ocean City, Md.

One fish doesn't make a season anywhere, but a white marlin caught off Ocean City the last week of September is, nevertheless, real news. Probably just the continuance of a season that has been turned inside out since its start, weeks late, on July 20. Again, it could be a gesture on the part of Old Lady Nature to prove to doubters that, regardless of how late the run is in getting under way it lasts the accepted 60-odd days.



ACKERMAN

Whatever it is, the fact remains, Capt. Leo Droughton, fishing a New York angler on his Sampan on Wednesday caught a 90-pound white marlin.

Reports from Nags Head and Manteo offer further proof that the fall run is on in earnest, not only for channel bass, but for big stripers as well.

Tom Eaton, Duke of Hatteras, says the island fishing is now at its very best. Plenty of channel bass, barracuda and small bluefish, as well as mackerel and pompano.

Some local anglers are down there now—Paul and Jack Townsend left Norfolk Wednesday evening on their Jacpau III for a late try for blue marlin, others are making preparations, while a few are bemoaning the fact they will be unable to make it to "the greatest fall fishing on the Atlantic seaboard."

In home waters, anglers are having considerable trouble finding the striper schools, and offering excuses for their shortcomings that range from the warm weather and great amounts of bottom feed to the idea that the pounds and netters have finally cleaned bay waters of the great brood of 1934—the last of any consequence we have had.

Upper bay striper-fishermen are hunting alewives and green shrimp for chumming—to no avail, for it isn't to be had. We would suggest they get out their trolling lures, as the Solomon Islanders have, and give them a whirl in the accepted fall manner.

Capt. Ed Bowen says the catches are small, because the schools raise for only a short time late in the evening, but the fish are of a size to more than make up for it.

Why more fishermen do not take a leaf from Harold Singer's book of angling is something we have never been able to understand, for, at this time of the year, the upper Patuxent River has much to offer not only the caster but the fisher of baits as well.

The river above Hills Bridge for many, many miles, its branches and tributary creeks as well, have a full quota of white perch, yellow perch and catfish as well as great fighting pike and black bass. The yellow perch and pike offering good going throughout the winter months, for those hardy enough to take it. The catfish become dormant by Christmas, while the season on bass is off November 30.

Reports seem to indicate the rain of last week was not heavy enough anywhere on the Potomac watershed to make the waters unfishable. Reports of good catches are coming from Goose Creek, the Monocacy and the Shenandoah.

Louisville Wins A. A. Play-Offs

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 29 (AP).—Kansas City chose to pitch to Ernie Andres, former Indiana University athletic star, in the ninth inning today of the fifth game of the American Association final playoff series, and the decision cost them, the Louisville Colonels winning 1 to 0.

The triumph, witnessed by more than 12,000 put Louisville within one game of final victory. The Colonels have won three games; Kansas City two.

Only Two Shortages

By Roger W. Babson

Parking Space And Courage

Like visiting Florida, everyone should take at least one good motor trip in a lifetime. Easterners should get in their cars and drive West, while Westerners should drive East. From the East to the West Coast, the trip can be made comfortably in eight or ten days. I am no spring chicken, but it is not tiring to an old chap. In fact, I relax physically, thoroughly enjoy myself, and secure a good brain dusting. I heartily recommend such a trip.

Each widely separated group certainly should see how the other half of the country lives. When taking such a trip, talk with people along the way. This is most important if one wishes to learn something of the way the other fellow is thinking. Go one way by car, as I did, and then ship your car back and give the railroads a break. They need it! It costs just about as much to ship my car by rail from Los Angeles to Boston as was spent on gas and oil going West.

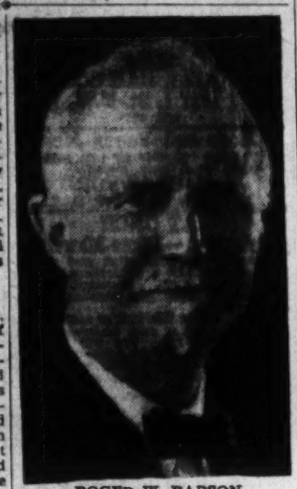
For many months to come,—yes, perhaps for years—many parts of the world will be closed to us. Students who last year won scholarships at the Sorbonne or at Oxford cannot fill their appointments this fall. Department store and specialty-shop buyers cannot go abroad this year. I, myself, in connection with many other businessmen, must forego my annual trip to England or the Continent. I doubt if the State Department would today issue a passport to me. This may all be a blessing in disguise. Now, do not get me wrong. I am all for helping Great Britain. If I were a younger man I would get over there by hook or by crook and do what I could to help them out. But I think it high time we looked at our own great country.

As far as I can judge our country is in pretty good shape. I am still a bull on the U. S. A. I will never sell her short any more than in my 40 years of security trading I have never sold a share of stock "short." What did I find? Why—I found a great abundance of all sorts of material goods. From East to West and back again over a different route, I saw plenty of evidence to convince me that we all have much in this land of ours that is worth keeping.

I saw paper mills working 24 hours a day; steam and hydroelectric plants with generators overtaxed; elevators full of wheat, corn and other grains; warehouses with bags of sugar piled to the rafters; automobile plants turning out next year's models; tool plants, glass companies, steel mills, aeronautical outfits, chemical units, canning factories, food companies, agricultural implement makers; yes, and arsenals, too. All these were pouring out goods for you and for me to buy,—ultimately, too, to pay for. Do not forget that last; it is important.

I found good tourist camps. Slept in a lot of them. By far the majority are good. If I were out of a job tomorrow I would start one on the outskirts of Boston. I find today more farm houses than ever before freshly painted. But, remember, I was looking out of my car window. The paint might have been pretty thin. Surely, however, much of the cash the farmer has received in the past few years has gone into improving the appearance of his home, inside and out.

I like to meet and talk with people. It is a pleasure to see new faces. When my employes take a train they sit in a parlor car. Give me the day coach! Who ever thought of speaking to a stranger in a Pullman? I see plenty of bankers back home, but when I shake the Eastern dust from my feet I want to talk with a brakeman, a filling station man, or a real farmer; not the kind of man who is buying a farm today because it seems the thing to do. I saw many newspaper editors, mechanics, clerks, waiters, and fellows just leaning up against a building. All had more to tell me than I had to give them. For once, I kept my mouth pretty well shut but my ears were open!



ROGER W. BABSON

I only found a shortage of two things—parking space and courage! I can, with several million other people, put up with the first, but I cannot tolerate the second. Some day our various municipal fathers will get around to provide the parking space, but we, ourselves, must provide our own courage. Are we wise to this situation?

In spite of the richness I saw, I believe that all the vast land, the huge stocks of raw materials, the finished goods, the great transportation facilities of rail, truck, and air are apparently serving only to make us discontented. What has become of the quality of appreciation? There was hardly an individual who talked to me who did not have something to beef about. Surely, if we do not wake up, many of the things I saw in this wide country of ours will be taken away from us.

One of my associates recently said that five years from now we would look back on 1939 and 1940 as the "good old years." He further asserted that there would be no return to "normalcy." Perhaps that is a good word to leave out of the lexicon of the professional economist like myself. Perhaps all of us must ultimately either work harder or face lower standards of living.

Quite probably the man on the street today will not, in his lifetime, lead a wholly peaceful, quiet, and restful life. For years to come he may chiefly be concerned with politics, European affairs, and the state of the nation in general. But we cannot quit. We must go on, win, lose or draw,—it is your game and mine. Let us quit talking and go to work, remembering that the normal life rightly calls for courage and sacrifice!

Don Budge Beats Perry For Pro Title

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 29.—Donald Budge, former world's amateur champion, won the national professional tennis championship today with a four-set victory over Fred Perry, Beverly Hills, Calif. The score was 6—3, 5—7, 6—4, 6—3.

After a dull first set, the two former Davis Cup stars, warmed up and put on a lively battle before 3,500 spectators.

Budge took a 5—3 lead in the second set and appeared to be on his way to a straight set victory when Perry rallied. The former British champion took four straight games and the set for his most impressive streak.

Each player won his own service for the first eight games of the third set before Budge broke through and took the set at 6—4.

Red-haired Budge, who is from Oakland, Calif., was never in serious trouble in the final set. The victory completed Budge's sweep of the major tennis titles, the lanky conqueror having already won all important amateur honors before turning pro. He succeeds Ellsworth Vines, who did not defend his title.

Gunners Routed, 51-0

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 29 (AP).—The Columbus Bullies of the American Professional Football League crushed the St. Louis Gunners 51 to 0 in an exhibition game today before 3,732 fans. The Bullies attacked chiefly through the air, piling up a total of 218 yards gained on passes, against 25 for the hopelessly outclassed Gunners.

Orioles Defeat Newark, 9 to 7

By International News Service

Newark, N. J., Sept. 29.—The Baltimore Orioles evened up the final round of the International League play-offs today by defeating the Newark Bears, 9 to 7, before a partisan gathering of 9,000 fans.

Each club now has won three victories and the seventh and deciding game will be played tomorrow night at Ruppert Stadium in Newark.

The Orioles scored all of their tallies in the first four frames. Starting Pitcher George Washburn was nicked for six runs in the first two innings with Gene Corbett's homer climaxing a second-inning uprising.

Stan Benjamin clouted a four-bagger off Al Gettel with two mates aboard to give the Birds three more scores in the fourth. Newark systematically pecked away at the slants of Pitchers Roy Brunner and Tom Hughes, who entered the contest in the fifth, and put across seven runs in the first five innings. Italo Chelini held them in check during the last four frames, however.

Newark is expected to start Hank Borowy in the all-important clash tomorrow night and Orlin Collier will do the hurling for the visitors.

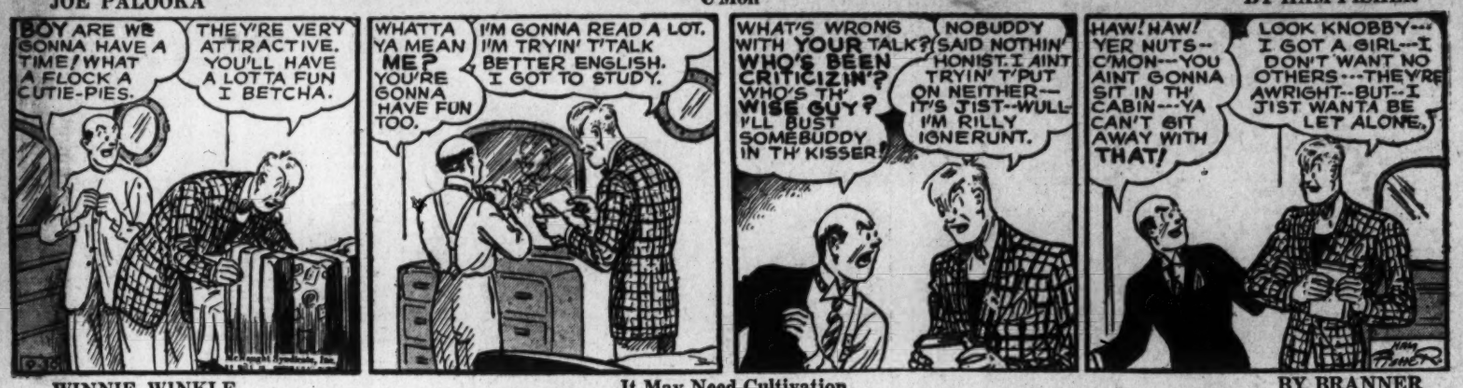
SUPERMAN — Superman Takes No Chances — BY JERRY SIEGEL AND JOE SHUSTER

AFTER HE HAS SUCCEEDED IN PREVENTING FURTHER CYANIDE GAS FROM BEING RELEASED INTO THE CITY MAINS, SUPERMAN ONCE AGAIN DONS HIS CIVILIAN GARMENTS, TRANSFORMING HIMSELF INTO CLARK KENT, REPORTER.
NOW TO HURRY BACK TO THE DAILY PLANET AND SEE HOW LOIS AND JON ARE MAKING OUT!
WHERE'S LOIS?
GONE HOME. SHE FOUND SHE WAS MORE TIRED THAN SHE REALIZED.
BUT WHEN CLARK REACHES THE NEWSPAPER OFFICE....
ODD! NO ONE ANSWERS!
HOWEVER, WHEN KENT PHONES LOIS' APARTMENT
ONCE AGAIN REVERTING TO HIS IDENTITY OF SUPERMAN, CLARK TRAILS JON TERRILL'S AUTO....
SHE MAY BE HOME BUT I'LL FOLLOW TERRILL ANYWAY. I HAVE A HUNCH...

JOE PALOOKA — C'Mon — BY HAM FISHER



BOY ARE WE GONNA HAVE A TIME! WHAT A FLOCK A CUTIE-PIES.
THEY'RE VERY ATTRACTIVE. YOU'LL HAVE A LOTTA FUN I BETCHA.
WHATTA YA MEAN ME? YOU'RE GONNA HAVE FUN TOO.
I'M GONNA READ A LOT. I'M TRYIN' T'TALK BETTER ENGLISH. I GOT TO STUDY.
WHAT'S WRONG WITH YOUR TALK? WHO'S BEEN CRITICIZIN'? WHO'S TH' WISE GUY? I'LL BUST SOMEBUDDY IN TH' KISSER!
NOBUDDY SAID NOTHIN' HONEST. I AINT TRYIN' T'PUT ON NEITHER--IT'S JIST--WULL I'M RILLY IGNERUNT.
HAW! HAW! YER NUTS--C'MON--YOU AINT GONNA SIT IN TH' CABIN--YA CAN'T GIT AWAY WITH THAT!
LOOK KNOBBY--I GOT A GIRL--I DON'T WANT NO OTHERS--THEY'RE AWRIGHT--BUT--I JIST WANTA BE LET ALONE.

WINNIE WINKLE — It May Need Cultivation — BY BRANNER

WE ARE STOPPING IN LILLY HOTEL IN THIS TOWN AND GETTING ORGANIZED!
FINE! WE CAN START WORKING OUR WAY TO HOLLYWOOD BY TEACHING DANCING IN EVERY TOWN WE STOP AT!
IT'S A SWELL IDEA—ALL BUT MY POSING AS A FRENCH COUNT! I'M JUST A DECOY!
DECOY--WHAT IS THAT?
DECOY--SAY, THAT'S GOING TO BE MY NAME--COUNT DE COY!
IT DOES SOUND FRENCH, THE WAY YOU SAY IT! BUT YOU'LL HAVE TO GROW A MUSTACHE FIRST!
YES, BILLY, NEVER MIND THE GOATEE--JUST GROWING A NICE LILLY MOOSTACHIOS!
MEANWHILE, NICK CAN LAY OUT THE ROUTE AND HAVE CARDS PRINTED!
ALL I'VE GOT TO DO IS SIT AROUND AND WAIT FOR A MUSTACHE TO SPROUT!

MR. AND MRS. — Just a Bite to Eat — BY ARTHUR FOLWELL AND ELLISON HOOVER

GUESS WHAT'S IN THIS LITTLE BOX. BET YOU CAN'T
I CAME ACROSS IT AMONG SOME OLD LETTERS—A CATERER'S BOX OF OUR WEDDING CAKE
LOOKS TO ME LIKE A HUNK OF PLUG TOBACCO
THAT'S A NICE THING TO SAY. IT WAS THE VERY FINEST FRUIT CAKE
SO? FEELS LIKE A WINDOW WEIGHT
WHAT ARE YOU DOING? EATING IT! YOU'RE JUST A BABY, PUTTING EVERYTHING IN YOUR MOUTH!
WELL, WHY NOT? I DIDN'T GET ANY THE NIGHT WE WERE MARRIED

NAPOLEON AND UNCLE ELBY — BY CLIFFORD McBRIDE

SO YOU FEEL PRETTY BIG AND IMPORTANT JUST BECAUSE YOU CAN OUT-DISTANCE SOME POOR LITTLE PUPPIES, DON'T YOU? REMEMBER WHEN THEY'RE AS BIG AS YOU, THEY'LL BE ABLE TO CLIMB HILLS TOO. I GUESS THEY'RE BACK HOME BY NOW.

JANE ARDEN — Is This the Man? — By MONTE BARRETT AND RUSSELL ROSS

WHAT HAPPENED?
SURE—I BET I KNOW YOUR FRIEND—SOUNDS LIKE A FELLOW WHO WAS AROUND HERE LAST WEEK—THEN HE RAN INTO SOMETHING SOFT—
HE WAS SITTING ON THAT BENCH—I SAW THE WHOLE THING—A FELLOW CAME BY, ASKED HIM IF HE WANTED A JOB—THEY WENT OFF TOGETHER—
WOULD YOU RECOGNIZE HIS PICTURE?
IS THIS THE MAN?

The Post Radio Time Table

So numerous are the time changes listed for the various cereal serials, soap operas and daytime dramalets that any complete enumeration of them is confusing. A quick look through the log below, however, may appraise you of your favorites' latest moves.

1 p. m., WOL—Free automobiles are offered for the best I'll Never Forget letters, details of which are announced on this thrice-weekly program.

4, WJSV—One of the prides of New York's Chase Bank is its collection of coins from the world's past. Vernon L. Brown is curator of this collection and on Columbia's Lecture Hall he traces the history of monetary standards.

5:45, WOL—Captain Midnight is a new serial for our town; it tells of a fearless World War pilot and his struggles with the intrigue of Ivan Shark, the master criminal. This replaces Little Orphan Annie on the local airlanes.

7:15, WJSV—Lanny Ross resumes his five-times-a-week schedule over the Columbia network, offering two songs from the new Al Jolson musical, "Hold On to our Hats."

9, WJSV—Claudette Colbert and Fred MacMurray play that switched-up version of "The Front Page," "His Girl Friday," film adaptation of the Hecht-MacArthur play.

11:30, WMAL—The Westminster Choir College observes its fifteenth year with a special airing that will include broadcasts by choirs under the direction of Westminster graduates from coast to coast. Dr. John Finley Williamson, founder of the unique school, conducts the present Westminster Choir in New York.

Mary Margaret McBride, C. B. S.'s woman "columnist of the air," whose five-day-a-week program begins over WJSV today at 3 o'clock began her newspaper career in the traditional movie fashion—by scooping her fellow reporters. She was fresh out of the School of Journalism at the University of Missouri and got a job in the college town of Columbia as reporter, part-time editor, advertising salesman, typesetter, and also society editor. Miss McBride's scoop-consciousness came in the society editor end of the business. She found out that by telephoning the local dairies she could find out who had ordered extra ice cream and thereby be well ahead of her fellow society editors on who was having a party. So much for Miss McBride's newspaper career.

About Miss McBride's radio career: Never having been within shouting distance of a microphone, she heard of an audition by a New York station for a woman to give household hints. Much to her surprise she got the job over 39 other applicants. On the program she was supposed to be a wise grandmother, knowing all about cooking and housekeeping. But on the third day, Miss McBride got pretty tired of it all and announced over the air that she couldn't cook very well and disliked housekeeping intensely. She finished out the program by telling human interest stories she'd run across. Much to the surprise of everyone around the station, the women listeners liked that much better than "Grandmother's" homely advice.

A. F. L. Leader Raises Youth Training Query

Robert Watt Sees 'Confusion' in Plans For More Mechanics

Robert J. Watt, international representative of the A. F. L., said yesterday that labor was concerned about "the possible flooding of the employment market with half-trained, low-priced youths while there are still thousands of well-equipped mechanics looking for employment" under the national defense program.

In an article written for the American Federationist, publication of the American Federation of Labor, Watts said:

There is continued and increasing confusion in the minds of workers throughout the country about what that National Advisory Defense Commission is trying to do about training workers for defense jobs. Workers are finding it difficult to understand the relationship to defense and the relationship to each other of the training programs of the Works Progress Aministration, National Youth Administration, Civilian Conservation Corps, United States Office of Education and the apprenticeship section of the United States Department of Labor."

Watts urged "wider participation by organized labor" in the formulation of national defense policies of "vital concern to workers."

At the same time John L. Lewis, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, called the C. I. O.'s third annual convention for AtlanticCity November 18.

Declaring in the convention call the last year has seen the development of vast economic problems, solution of which "vitally affect the interests of labor," Lewis said:

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations, because of its status and position, has a deep obligation to present to the Nation the views of organized labor upon the important questions which today beset the American people."

20,000 Applaud as Elder Michaux Baptizes Converts in Outdoor Ceremony at Stadium

Nazi Parties Band Together In Hungary

Increased Influence In Government Seen As Result of Move

By the Associated Press

Budapest, Hungary, Sept. 29.—A merger of the Magyar National Socialist Party and the Arrow Cross Party, largest of Hungary's Nazi groups, was announced today.

The merger placed virtually all Hungarian Nazis in one party, since several other small groups were united some weeks ago with the Magyar National Socialists.

The merger, together with a more lenient government attitude toward the Nazi groups, was expected to lead to an immediate increase in their strength and influence.

Evidence of the government's changed attitude toward Nazi groups since the recent Vienna conference—at which Germany and Italy sliced off a large section of Transylvania from Rumania and gave it to Hungary—was seen in the release from prison September 18 of Ferenc Szalasi, Hungary's "Little Hitler," under a general amnesty to political offenders.

Szalasi, who headed the Arrow Cross Party, is expected to head the merged organization. The new party will have about 20 per cent of the 260 members of Parliament.

The Nazi newspaper Magyarsag, said "uniting of the two big parties changes the picture of Hungary's internal political life. Almost 50 Nazi legislators will fight unitedly in the Hungarian Parliament for the Hungarian Arrow Cross idea. This circumstance enhances greatly the political, economic and moral strength of the movement.

"Our conceptions and aims correspond with the ideology and political scope of the Axis powers. Parallel with them, we wish to build up a new and happy Europe of racialism and national socialism."

160 New Followers Received Into Faith In Immersion Rite

At home plate in Griffith Stadium, where many a hard-hitting man has gone down, 160 men, women and children went down into the "waters of death" of an improvised baptismal tank last night and emerged into the new life of the Church of God of Elder Lightfoot Michaux.

Dressed in sweeping white robes and with towels wrapped around their heads, the converts were baptized at the rate of eight a minute before an applauding crowd of 20,000. Two hours of preaching by the Elder and of swinging evangelical music by his chorus of 200 voices whipped them into a spirit of ecstatic frenzy.

"Can a Man Be a Christian and Not Be Baptized by Immersion?" was the Elder's topic. "He most certainly cannot," was his conclusion after 50 minutes of oratory and Bible reading.

"Some baptize by sprinklin', some by pourin', some forwards and some backwards, and some don't baptize at all," he shouted. "You folks that've just been sprinkled ain't been nothin' but dry cleaned."

The candidates for baptism came from Norfolk, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, as well as Washington. Preceding their "resurrection" at last night's service they paraded through the streets in buses.

After winning the first club, declarer leads a small club, ruffing with dummy's nine. A small spade is led to the king and a third club is then ruffed with dummy's ace. Dummy's last trump is played, and then declarer, realizing that East can be squeezed if he holds the ace of hearts and four diamonds, plays his remaining trumps.

East, who has already discarded one heart, is obliged to throw off two more. He does not dare to unguard the diamonds, and consequently must discard the queen and nine of hearts.

South now leads his high club and East is in a hopeless position. If he parts with the ace of hearts, declarer will have all the good hearts. If he discards a diamond, dummy can run four diamonds as declarer discards his hearts. In either event, declarer makes a grand slam.

Plane Workers Protest Lack Of Protection

Britons Reveal Production Slowed By Nazi Bombings

By the United Press

London, Sept. 29.—Germany's unrelenting air siege of the last three weeks has seriously interfered with the production of some British aircraft factories, it was revealed today by workers in letters to Lord Rothermere's Sunday Dispatch.

A week ago the Dispatch criticized the "gutsless" attitude of 1,500 workers in an aircraft factory near London because they halted work for nine hours one night during Nazi air attacks, and today's letters were in angry retort to the complaint.

The workers, in their indignant replies, said that thousands of working hours were being lost each week during air raids because the factory owners had not taken the required precautions to protect them.

The letters of the workers, from a number of factories, were published by the Dispatch under a bold heading: "The Great Aircraft Scandal!"

These letters reveal that workers in a number of factories have been obliged to cease working during alerts, even though they were willing to continue work on the production of vitally needed airplanes and parts while the bombs fell.

One worker said that in his factory the night shift was not allowed to work during raids because the roof is 95 per cent glass and "lookouts" for raiders had not yet been organized.

"One week," he said, "our night shift lost 80,000 working hours. The last week of September, from the fourteenth to twenty-first, this total may be even higher—not because the workers have no guts as you put it, but because the firm does not have the guts to let them work because it has not taken the required precautions to protect them."

One worker wrote:

"Send your workers around to the large accessories factories anywhere around the London area and find out how much production the night shifts have achieved in the past three weeks. What else can you expect? Wherever you walk into factories you are greeted with instructions to take cover directly when the warning goes off."

Griffith Evans Ex-Commerce Bureau Worker, Seeks Hobby

EVANS

Evans, 76, left the bureau several weeks ago after working for Uncle Sam for nearly 40 years, almost four decades during which he seldom took leave, when his dominating motive was work.

Evans loves music, particularly Welsh music, and for a while it seemed to him, he said yesterday, that music would be enough for a retired man.

But now he isn't so certain of the life-filling powers of Wlesh music—"some things that are enjoyed by some are not enjoyed by others"—though he has lost none of his fondness for it. Evans would like something else to do, a little light editorial work, for example.

Evans, a Welshman and president of the St. David's Society, used to sing the Welsh songs, himself. But age also has retired his voice.

"You don't have voice when you reach a certain age," he said.

Evans lives at 67 Observatory Circle.

Mrs. Reeside Dies At 73; Funeral Rites Tomorrow

Funeral services for Mrs. Elizabeth Benson Johnson Reeside, who died Saturday night after a short illness, will be held at 2 p. m. tomorrow at Covenant-First Presbyterian Church. She was the wife of Frank P. Reeside, former Washington banker.

Mrs. Reeside, who was 73 years old, was a native of Washington. Her parents and grandparents also lived here. She became ill at her home in the Woodward Apartments, 2311 Connecticut avenue northwest, Saturday night and died a few hours later in Garfield Hospital.

Interment will be private in Rock Creek Cemetery.

In former years Mrs. Reeside had been active in the charities of the Church of the Covenant, as well as on the board of lady visitors of the Washington Home for Foundlings and also the Washington Homeopathic Hospital.

She is survived by four sons, Alan Edson Reeside, Frank Perry Reeside, Arthur Murray Reeside, Robert Hughes Reeside, all of Washington; a daughter, Mrs. Henry D. M. Sherrerd, Haddonfield, N. J.; five grandchildren; a sister, Mrs. Suzanne Oldberg, Washington.

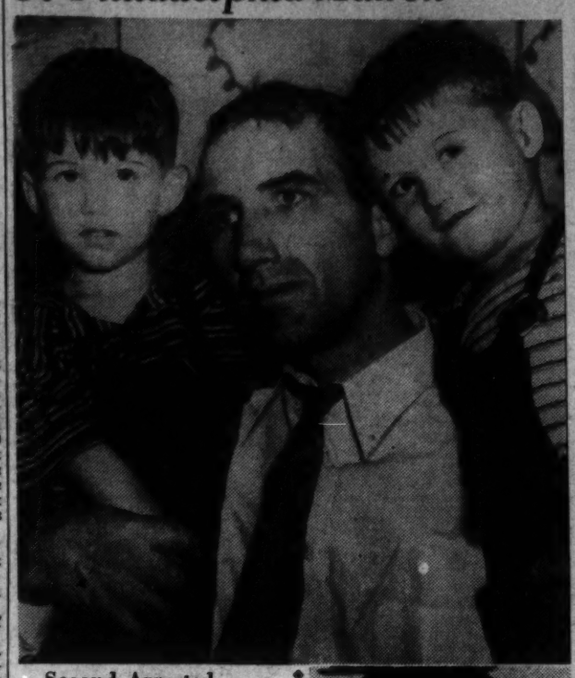
Mrs. Welker Dies; Lived 35 Years In Washington

Mrs. Mary Pierson Blackwell Welker, a resident of Washington for the past 35 years, died yesterday at her home, 4220 Nebraska avenue northwest.

A native of New Jersey, she came to Washington with her husband, Scott E. Walker, on his retirement from business. She was a member of the Covenant Presbyterian Church.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Welker leaves one sister, Mrs. Anna K. Blackwell, of Newark, N. J.

Man Confesses Party Slaying Of Philadelphia Matron



Second Arrested, Booked as Fugitive; Statement Signed

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Sept. 29.—Police Capt. William J. Engle announced today that two men had been arrested in connection with the brutal slaying of Mrs. Ethel Craft Atkins, 35-year-old mother, and that one of them had signed a statement admitting the crime.

Engle said the men were booked as fugitives from justice and identified them as William J. Earnest, 24, and Richard Brady, 24, both of Philadelphia.

The police captain said Earnest had admitted bludgeoning attractive, red-haired Mrs. Atkins early last Tuesday morning following a party in a vacant farmhouse at Suburban Horsham, Montgomery County.

Brady, Engle said, accompanied Earnest and Mrs. Atkins to the farmhouse but had remained outside in an automobile and had no knowledge of the killing.

The two men, Engle said, will be given a hearing here tomorrow and then turned over to Montgomery county authorities.

The body of Mrs. Atkins, who had remarried after her divorce from John C. Angier, of Baltimore, a relative by marriage of the Duke tobacco family, was found last Tuesday night by the owner of the farmhouse when he took a prospective tenant to view the property.

Sprawled halfway down a flight of stairs, the woman's body was nude except for stockings and a single white slipper.

Bloodstains and wrecked furniture in an upstairs room gave evidence of a terrific struggle.

Police questioning of 17 men known to have seen or been with Mrs. Atkins at various times from 8 a. m. Saturday morning, when she disappeared from her Philadelphia home, until late Monday night resulted in the arrests of Earnest and Brady, Engle said.

WILLIAM J. EARNEST, 24, who, police said, signed a statement admitting he had bludgeoned to death Mrs. Ethel Craft Atkins, 35-year-old mother. Shown in other picture are James F. Atkins, husband of the slain woman, as he comforts their twin sons.

Goodwill Services

The Rev. Clarkson R. Banes, pastor of Waugh Methodist Church, will be guest speaker at the Goodwill Industries chapel service tomorrow at 8:15 a. m. Friday the Rev. H. J. Miller, of St. George's Episcopal Church of Clarendon, Va., will address the workers. Open to the public, the services are held at the same hour each day Monday through Friday at the auditorium of the Goodwill industries, 1218 New Hampshire avenue northwest.

3 G. O. P. Candidates In Florida Withdraw

Tallahassee, Fla., Sept. 29 (AP).—Republican nominees for three major offices in Florida have signed affidavits of withdrawal, apparently leaving a clear field for Democratic nominees in the November general election.

The affidavits carried the names of Miles H. Draper, of Tampa, nominee for United States Senator; John F. Walter, of Daytona Beach, for Governor, and Harry Schadd, of Gainesville, for Attorney General.

C.I.O. Group Bars Nazis, Communists as Officers

Jefferson City, Mo., Sept. 29 (AP).—Missouri's State Council of C. I. O. unions today barred its officers from membership in any Nazi, Communist or Fascist organization.

By unanimous vote the convention amended its constitution to provide that any member or officer of the council identified with an organization "giving aid or comfort to Naziism, Communism or Fascism" shall be expelled and permanently disbarred from holding office.
